| Description             | The monument comprises the remains of the old parish church of Killean and its burial ground, which contains a variety of carved gravestones. A simple, unicameral church was erected here probably in the second half of the 12th century. It was extended by the addition of a chancel to the E in the early 13th century with an elaborate E window, and a N aisle was added during the 15th century. The church was abandoned in 1770, but the N aisle was reused in the 19th century as the burial aisle of the MacDonalds of Largie. Evidence for this development sequence survives in the upstanding fabric of the building and further information is likely to be preserved beneath the ground. The church is approximately 25m long (E-W) by 13m wide (N-S). The burial aisle contains several fine 14th- to 15th-century tombstones of the Kintyre and Iona schools, as well as an early Christian cross-shaped stone. The burial ground contains a range of interesting 18th-to 19th-century gravestones, such as that commemorating Donald MacKinnon, who died in 1810, which depicts a man ploughing with a two-horse team. There is high potential for the presence of further archaeological remains and carved stones within the burial ground, possibly including evidence for the early phases of the church. The church is located on the W coast of Kintyre overlooking the Sound of Gigha at a height of around 10m above sea level. The monument was first scheduled in 1971, but the documentation did not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The area to be scheduled is irregular on plan to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. The scheduling extends up to but does not include the stone boundary wall. Specifically excluded from the scheduling are any burial lairs in active use. Statement of National Importance: The monument is of national importance because of its inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular the establishment and development of a parish church and burial ground from the 12th century to the later 18th century. The church, though roofless, is largely intact and survives as an impressive ruin retaining noteworthy architectural detail. The range of gravestones within and around the church, of various dates and some with fine carving detail, add to the importance of the monument. There is high potential for the survival of archaeological features and deposits within the burial ground and beneath the church spanning at least six centuries of religious worship and burial. The loss of the monument would significantly affect our ability to understand medieval and later church architecture and religious practice in Argyll and western Scotland. |

| Description             | The monument comprises a prehistoric enclosure which is situated on a level terrace in the hillside 700m to the ESE of Beachmeanach farm. The monument is circular in shape, consisting of a stony bank 0.5m high and 2.5m wide, enclosing an area approximately 25m in diameter. There is a gap in the bank on the SW, probably representing the original entrance. The monument is being rescheduled because the original scheduling was wrongly located. The area now to to be scheduled is circular and measures 70m in diameter to include the enclosure and an area around in which associated remains are likely to survive, as marked in red on the accompanying map extract. Statement of National Importance:The monument is of national importance because it is a well-preserved example of a type of later prehistoric enclosed settlement which has the potential to increase considerably our understanding of later prehistoric domestic life and settlement architecture. |

| Description             | Some slight remains of a fort are situated about 800m NE of Killean House, and at a height of 75m OD, at the edge of a gorge through which the Killean Burn runs. The defences have comprised three walls, the innermost of which encloses an oval area measuring 30.5m by 20m. At best this wall is represented by a mound of debris 2.4m thick and 1.0m high, but a few outer facing-stones are visible in situ on the E side. Although the second and third walls are fragmentary, the position of the entrance to the fort is marked by broad gaps in both, and by a corresponding gap in the innermost wall. The medial wall probably extended from edge to edge of the gorge, but the outer wall seems to have been simply a hornwork designed to give extra protection to the entrance. The interior of the fort is overgrown with trees and bushes. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1966. |

Appendix 9.2: Gazetteer of Heritage Assets and Events

This small oval fortification is situated on the S edge of the gorge of the Killeen Burn and measures only 30m from N to S by 20m transversely (0.05ha) within a wall reduced to little more than a thin band of rubble. A second wall lies concentrically on the NW quarter, where a third wall possibly formed a small annexe or hornwork outside a gap in the inner defences that probably marks the position of the entrance. The interior is featureless - Information from An Atlas of Hillforts of Great Britain and Ireland – 23 May 2016. Atlas of Hillforts SC2267

| Description             | The boulder, which is now split, bears cup and ring marks on both halves. The larger part measures 2.4m by 2.1m and bears 54 cupmarks up to 0.1m in diameter and 0.38m deep. Three cups have single rings round them and three have double rings. Two pairs of cups are joined by short channels. The smaller half measures 2.4m by 1.5m and bears thirty nine cupmarks, six of which are surrounded by incomplete rings. The marks are somewhat weathered. Kintyre contains one of the heaviest concentrations of cup and ring markings in Scotland. Most of them are on boulders on the hills overlooking the west coast. Within this spread there are occasional concentrations. In the concentration around Low Clachaig the boulders lie on the sides of small valleys to the north of the split boulder, and to the south they lie on a west-pointing shoulder of ground. In all, eight boulders are known, in an area measuring roughly 4km by 1km and triangular in shape with its point to the south. Statement of National Importance:The monument is of national importance because the cup and ring marks are the best example of their class in Kintyre. Nationally they fall below guardianship standard, but are exceptionally fine. The area in which they lie contains other cupmarked rocks and in addition to their intrinsic importance the Low Clachaig cupmarked boulders are of national importance as part of an extensive grouping on the W coast of Kintyre, and as part of a local group of some eight cup marked boulders. |

| Description | The monument comprises a later prehistoric or early historic dun with adjacent later remains including field banks and a possible kiln, sited on the hill slope N of the Barr Water, 500m SW of the ruined steading known as Garvalt. The dun encloses an area approximately 6m in diameter, with walls of stone blocks. A later field bank adjoins the dun on the E, running at right angles to the slope. To the west of the dun is a substantial stone-built structure, possibly a corn-drying kiln. There are further remains of structures and enclosures in the vicinity of the dun, possibly remains of shielings or more permanent settlement. The monument is being rescheduled because the original scheduling was wrongly sited. The area now to be scheduled measures 100m NNW-SSE by 100m, to include the dun and the later settlement and field system remains which survive around it, as shown in red on the accompanying map extract. Statement of National Importance:The monument is of national importance because it is an example of a multi-period settlement complex which has the potential to increase considerably our understanding both of later prehistoric or early historic domestic life and settlement architecture, and of medieval or later rural domestic life and land use. |

| Description             | The remains of a Clyde group chambered cairn which was excavated by J G Scott in 1952-3, the cairn material having been almost entirely removed between 1845 and 1930. At the time of excavation the remains were roughly square in plan, about 28ft across and 3ft in maximum height, the shape being due to ploughing. The cairn material is mainly boulders, now largely grass-covered. Since excavation the site has been partly filled in, but the main stones of the chamber and portal have been left visible. The entrance, facing east, is between two portal stones, 1ft 9ins apart, flanking a passage 3ft long. The north portal, a huge slab 9ft 4ins high by 6ft 3ins wide, is the most prominent feature of the site. No trace of a forecourt facade was found. The excavation showed that the passage walls had been of dry-stone walling, but the two chambers, separated by a low septal slab, were formed of large slabs. The primary burial had been by inhumation in the sandy sub-soil, but this had been sealed and paved in preparation for the reception of a single Early Bronze Age cremation with grave-goods. After this burial a blocking of clay, containing boulders and stone slabs, was inserted into the chamber and passage and spread out fan-wise in front of the portals. The name 'Carragh an |

Appendix 9.2: Gazetteer of Heritage Assets and Events

Talaidh', Pillar of the Soothing, presumably applies to the large portal into which at least two dozen nails and screws have been driven. Driving in a nail at midnight was formerly thought to be a cure for toothache.

The remains of this chambered cairn are as described and planned by the preceeding authorities. In the large portal slab, Carragh an Talaidh, are some small pit holes; presumably the nails and screws have long since rusted away.

| Description             | A dun is situated about 180m ENE of Grogport Old Manse on a rocky boss (9m OD) at the higher end of a ridge overlooking the shore of Kilbrannan Sound. The summit of the boss is uneven, and the NW and SE ends contain outcrops which rise some 1.2m and 2.4m respectively above a central hollow. At the NE corner of this hollow, a fissure in the rock opens into a narrow sloping cleft which leads into a cave, the mouth of which is at the base of the ridge. The dun wall clings to the edge of the boss and encloses an area measuring 12m by 9.5m. Although the wall has been heavily robbed and no part of the inner face survives, long stretches of the lowest courses of the outer face remain in situ, and at the S corner it stands to a height of 0.8m in six courses. A gap in the middle of the SW side probably marks the site of the original entrance. In 2004 this site was examined as part of the Coastal Zone Assessment Survey of Kintyre and the Isle of Arran (CFA Archaeology Ltd for HS, the Firth of Clyde Forum and the SCAPE Trust). The condition of the site was noted as 'Fair' and further action recommended by CFA Archaeology Ltd for this site is 'Nil'. Grogport: Stone wallSource: FieldwalkingDate: 18th-20th C ADCressey, M. &amp; Badger, S., 'Coastal Zone Assessment Survey: Kintyre &amp; Isle of Arran', CFA Archaeology Ltd, 2004Entered WoSAS (MO'H) 15/04/08 |

HER Number

Status Scheduled Monument

Easting 181440

Northing 645022

Parish Saddell and Skipness

Council Argyll and Bute

Description The monument consists of a small dun on a pillar of rock in dense woodland. The dun is defined by traces of a wall, which survives in places up to 3m in thickness. The wall on the SW stands to a height of 3 courses and an entrance is visible. Access to the entrance is up a steep slope to the W of the dun. The entrance is about 1m wide at its outer end and has door checks about halfway along its length. The interior of the dun is about 6m SE-NW by 4.5m SW-NE and is featureless.

The area to be scheduled measures 40m in diameter, to include the dun, the rock pillar on which it stands and an area around in which traces of activities associated with the occupation of the dun may survive.

Statement of National Importance:

The monument is of national importance for its potential contribution to an understanding of prehistoric defensive architecture. The dun will also contain important information on the domestic life and farming practices of those who built and lived within it.

HER Number

Status Scheduled Monument

Easting 165942

Northing 637567

Parish Killeen and Kilchenzie

Council Argyll and Bute

Description The monument comprises a prehistoric dun, a coastal defended settlement, likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500). It survives as a low, turf-covered, sub-oval wall, which encloses an area of approximately 15m by 10m. The dun occupies the summit of an isolated rock, some 5m in height, which stands on the seashore some 450m S of Glenacardoch Point in west Kintyre. The monument was first scheduled in 1972, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this.

The area to be scheduled is irregular on plan and is defined by base of the rock outcrop on which the monument is sited. The scheduled area includes the remains described above, an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, and adjoining land essential for the monument's support and preservation, as shown in red on the accompanying map.

Statement of National Importance:

Intrinsic characteristics-

The dun occupies the summit of a substantial rock outcrop on the coastal edge of west Kintyre.

Appendix 9.2: Gazetteer of Heritage Assets and Events

The rock itself provides strong natural protection, with sheer or overhanging sides on all but the SSE side, where access can be gained up a steep slope. This was probably where the entrance was sited. The enclosure walling is much reduced, but stands up to 1m high and is 3m wide in places, and can be traced around the summit. The interior is overgrown, but no features are visible. There has been a small landslip on the NE side, which may include occupation material deriving from the dun and its wall.

Overall, the footprint of the monument is intact and it survives in reasonably good condition, despite its exposed coastal location and the effects of a localised landslip. There is high potential for the survival of buried deposits and features beneath and beyond the wall and within the dun interior. Future examination of the dun could provide information about its date, form and construction, and investigation of the interior could contribute to our understanding of how it was used and how this may have changed over time. Buried artefacts and palaeoenvironmental evidence can contribute to our understanding of how people lived and worked, the extent and nature of trade and exchange, and the nature of the agricultural economy in this vicinity. The monument has the potential to contribute to our understanding of the nature of Iron Age settlement and the design and development of these small defended settlements.

Contextual characteristics-

This type of defended settlement characterises much of the coastal occupation of Argyll and Atlantic Scotland in later prehistory. Duns belong to a much broader category of later prehistoric defended settlement, which includes brochs, forts, crannogs, duns and hut circles. Altogether, over 500 later prehistoric settlements are known in Argyll. It is believed that duns represent the remains of the living spaces of small groups or single families. They are largely a coastal phenomenon and they tend to be located on locally high ground, along prominent coastal routes or within easy reach of the coast, as in this case.

This example is interesting because of its position on top of an isolated rock at the high water mark, where it must have been particularly exposed, both to the elements and to seafarers travelling along this coast. It clearly favours a seaward outlook and was undoubtedly visible from the sea, despite its low altitude. Defence and visibility were evidently primary factors for the selection of this location. The dun may have formed part of a network of similar sites along this coastline, some of which would have been inter-visible: the dun at Dun Ach'na h-Atha, for example, is located less than 2km to the NE, and Dun Sheallaidh less than 3km to the SSE. This monument has high potential to contribute to our understanding of the Iron Age occupation of Kintyre and further afield.

National Importance-

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, the design and construction of later prehistoric, small defended settlements in western Scotland and their place in the wider economy and society. There is good potential for well-preserved archaeological remains surviving within and immediately outside the dun. These buried remains can tell us much about the people who built and lived in the settlement and the connections they had with other groups. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the occupation of Argyll in the later prehistoric and early historic periods.

| Description | Standing Stone. This stone (D Colville 1930) is situated 18.5m S of the cairn (NR63NE 24) at the N edge of a field overlooking the Allt an Fhraoich from a height of 15m OD. Standing 1.8m in height, it measures 1.2m by 0.3m at the base, with the longer axis aligned NNE and SSW and rises with a gradual taper to a fairly level top, where the breadth is 0.6m and the thickness 0.2m. This cairn is situated close to a standing stone (NR63NE 18) at the northern edge of a cultivated field; it overlooks the left bank of the Allt an Fhraoich from a height of 15m OD. As it exists today, the cairn takes the form of a low mound of stones which covers an area measuring about 21.5m by 7.5m and its present size may be to some extent due to the dumping of stones cleared from the adjacent field. A number of large boulders are visible round the E arc of the perimeter and may be part of an original kerb. Approximately in the centre of the cairn there are two large slabs, each measuring about 1.2m in length and 0.23m in thickness; one of them is set on edge and projects 0.3m above ground, while the other is lying flat. Near the edge of the cairn there is a third slab, measuring 0.76m both in length and breadth and 0.3m in thickness. These three slabs evidently belonged to a cist which was discovered in the cairn many years ago. |

| Description             | Dun, Dun Ach'na h-Atha. This dun is situated on the brink of a cliff overlooking the S end of the Muasdale machair from a height of 30m OD. It appears to have been oval on plan and to have measured about 15m by 13.5m internally, but stone-robbing has reduced the wall to a thick band of rubble which is spread to a width of 6m. A considerable stretch of the outer face of the wall, for which large boulders are employed, protrudes through the debris on the S; for the most part only the lowest course survives, but in a few places the wall stands to a height of 1.1m in three courses. The entrance, which faces E, is 0.9m in width. The outer corner-stone on the S side of the passageway is still in situ, and a single facing-stone is visible on the N side. |

| Description             | The monument comprises a prehistoric defended settlement of a type known as a dun, likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500). The dun survives as a low, roughly oval-shaped enclosure, with traces of internal features. It measures approximately 15m NW-SE by 7.5m transversely, with its entrance and approach from the SW side. It occupies the higher ground of a substantial, locally distinctive knoll, at around 15m above sea level, in an area of mixed rough grazing and unimproved land. It is located on the coastal strip of west Kintyre, between the shoreline some 50m to the W and a N-S trending ridge which rises immediately E of the dun. The monument was first scheduled in 1971, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. |

The area to be scheduled is irregular on plan and is defined by the base of the rock outcrop on which the monument is sited, and includes an area extending W and SW of the outcrop. The scheduled area includes the remains described above, an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, and adjoining land essential for the monument's support and preservation, as shown in red on the accompanying map. Specifically excluded from the scheduling are the above-ground elements of a post-and-wire fence and a drystone wall to the immediate N of the outcrop, to allow for their maintenance.

Statement of National Importance:

Intrinsic characteristics-

The dun enclosure occupies most of the summit of a substantial rock outcrop. The outcrop is a naturally defensive location with steep or sheer sides to the N and E, but more sloping ground to the S and W, where the approach and entrance to the dun is likely to have been. The outline of the enclosure wall is clearly discernible beneath the turf and vegetation cover, together with intermittent traces of the outer and inner faces. Around the SW and parts of the W side, however, the edge of the knoll has collapsed, taking with it part of the wall; this debris is likely to contain displaced archaeological material from the construction and use of the dun. The interior of the dun is uneven, but the low outline of a sub-rectangular structure, measuring approximately 5.5m by 3m, has been recorded previously, which may be a secondary feature.

Overall, the footprint of the monument is intact and it survives in reasonably good condition, despite the relatively slight appearance of the perimeter wall and its partial collapse. There is high potential for the survival of buried deposits and features beneath and beyond the wall and within the dun interior. Future examination of the dun could provide detailed information about its date, form and construction, and investigation of the interior could contribute to our understanding of how it was used and how this may have changed over time. Buried artefacts and palaeoenvironmental evidence can contribute to our understanding of how people lived and worked, the extent and nature of trade and exchange, and the nature of the agricultural economy. The monument has the potential to contribute to our understanding of the nature of Iron Age settlement and the design and development of this type of prehistoric defended enclosure.

Contextual characteristics-

This type of defended settlement characterises much of the coastal occupation of Argyll and Atlantic Scotland in later prehistory. They belong to a much broader category of later prehistoric settlement, which includes brochs, forts, crannogs, duns and hut circles. Altogether, over 500 later prehistoric settlements are known in Argyll. It is believed that duns represent the remains of the living spaces of small groups or single families. They are largely a coastal phenomenon and tend to be located on locally high ground, along prominent coastal routes or within easy reach of the coast, as in this case.

This example is interesting because of its position right on the west coast of Kintyre, with a seaward outlook and clearly visible from the sea. Combined with its prominent knoll-top position, this suggests that defence and visibility were chief among the factors which determined its siting here, rather than proximity to agricultural land, for instance. Dun Domhnuill is one of a series of duns along this coast, with at least another four recorded within less than 2.5km to the N and S. They may have formed part of a network of broadly similar intervisible sites along the coastline. Dun Domhnuill has high potential to contribute to our understanding of the Iron Age settlement of Kintyre and further afield.

National Importance-

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, the design and construction of later prehistoric, small defended settlements in western Scotland, and their place in the wider economy and society. There is good potential for well-preserved archaeological remains surviving within and immediately outside the dun. These buried remains can tell us much about the people who built and lived in the settlement and the connections they had with other groups. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the occupation of Argyll in the later prehistoric and early historic periods.

| Description | The monument comprises a prehistoric dun likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500), together with a shallow cave at the base of the rock on which the dun is sited. The dun survives as the remains of a low, turf-covered wall enclosing an oval area measuring around 15m NE to SW by 9m transversely. It is situated on the coastal strip of west Kintyre at 15m above sea level, on the summit of a distinctive knoll of red sandstone, which rises to a height of 4.5m above the surrounding coastal plain. The rock is located on the shoreline in an area of rough grazing and scrub, and is connected to higher ground on the E by a narrow col. The monument was first scheduled in 1973, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The area to be scheduled is irregular on plan, defined by the base of the rock on which the monument is sited. The scheduled area includes the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. Specifically excluded from the scheduling are the above-ground elements of an electricity transmission support pole, an associated cable and a wooden fence that closes off the cave in the W side of the rock, to allow for their maintenance. Statement of National Importance: Intrinsic characteristics- The dun occupies the summit of a prominent knoll which has steep or sheer sides on all but its NE side, where the approach and entrance may have been located. Traces of walling are visible around the E, N and S of the summit in the form of a band of rubble and boulders, and some external facing-stones can be seen on the W side. The low outline of a secondary sub-rectangular building is visible in the interior. Otherwise, the interior is uneven and without visible features. Given the exposed setting of the dun, it is likely that soil erosion has taken place on the knoll which suggests that occupation and midden material is likely to have been dispersed on the approach slope and at the foot of the knoll. A shallow cave occurs at the base of the W side of the knoll, measuring around 7m across and 3.5m deep. A quantity of human bones and sea shells was recovered in 1845, reportedly from several apertures in the back wall of the cave formed by water action on faults in the sandstone. The discovery of sea shells might indicate occupation, but the dating, duration of use and function of the cave and its contents are unknown. Overall, the footprint of the monument is intact and it survives in reasonably good condition, despite the relatively slight appearance of the enclosing wall. There is high potential for the survival of buried deposits and features beneath and beyond the wall and within the dun interior, as well as beneath the floor of the cave. Future examination of the dun could provide information about its date, form and construction, and investigation of the interior could contribute to our understanding of how it was used and how this may have changed over time. Buried artefacts and palaeoenvironmental evidence can contribute to our understanding of how people lived and worked, the extent and nature of trade and exchange, and the nature of the agricultural economy in this vicinity. Future investigation of the cave could ascertain the date of its use as a repository for human remains and the date, nature and duration of any occupation. The monument has the potential to contribute to our understanding of the nature of Iron Age settlement, the design and development of these small defended settlements, and the use of natural caves in antiquity. Contextual characteristics- The dun is a type of defended settlement that characterises much of the coastal occupation of Argyll and Atlantic Scotland in later prehistory. Duns belong to a much broader category of later prehistoric settlement, which includes brochs, forts, crannogs, duns and hut circles. Altogether, over 500 later prehistoric settlements are known in Argyll. It is believed that duns represent the remains of living spaces of small groups or single families. They are largely a coastal phenomenon and tend to be located on locally high ground, along prominent coastal | routes or within easy reach of the coast, as in this case.

Researchers have suggested that duns are often positioned for their seaward views, their visibility to seafarers, and sometimes their inter-visibility. This example undoubtedly favours a seaward outlook and would have been visible from the sea. It may have formed part of a network of broadly contemporary, similar sites along the western coastline of Kintyre: for example, Dun Beacheaire lies only some 400m to the NE, and Dun Domhnuill lies just over 2km to the S. This monument has high potential to contribute to our understanding of the Iron Age occupation of Kintyre and further afield. The cave is an intriguing and rare feature of unknown date and function, but adds to the value of the monument overall.

National Importance-

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, the design and construction of later prehistoric, small defended settlements in western Scotland, and their place in the wider economy and society. There is good potential for well-preserved archaeological remains to survive within and immediately outside the dun. These buried remains can tell us much about the people who built and lived in the settlement and the connections they had with other groups. The cave has the potential to add to the time-depth of the site and to enhance our understanding of the use of natural caves in antiquity. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the occupation of Argyll in the later prehistoric and possibly other periods.

| Description             | This dun is situated in trees at a height of 45m OD; it occupies a strong natural position on the western tip of a narrow promontory between the left bank of the Barr Water and a small unnamed tributary. The dun probably measured about 15m by 12m internally, but no trace of the enclosing wall survives on the NW, probably as a result of the erosion of the cliff face which falls abruptly to the river on this side. Elsewhere the wall is represented by a band of stony debris, up to 1.2m in height and some 4.6m in thickness, in which a few external facing-stones are visible at the SW end. No entrance can now be seen and, apart from a ruinous wall of no great age, the interior is featureless. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960. The dun is as described and planned by RCAHMS.         Surveyed at 1:10,000.         Visited by OS (JB) 8 December 1977. |

| Description             | The monument comprises an earthfast monolith and two rock outcrops in close proximity, all decorated with prehistoric rock art motifs. The motifs were carved probably during the early prehistoric period, between about 3500 BC and 2500 BC. The monolith now serves as the N side of a gateway between two pasture fields. It measures roughly 0.9m wide by 0.3m deep at its base, but tapers towards the top. It stands 1.5m high and now leans at an angle of 45 degrees, with the decorated surface facing SW. Over 50 cup-marks and variations of cup-mark designs have been recorded. The two outcrops are visible at ground level as small areas of exposed rock surface within pasture land. The easternmost is 1.5m long by 0.9m wide and is decorated with at least 12 cup-marks. The visible area of the second outcrop, 120m to the W, measures 1.2m by 1.2m and is decorated with at least eight cup-marks. The monolith and rock outcrops are located on the S and N sides respectively of the Allt Achapharick burn at approximately 120m above sea level. The former has a predominantly E-facing outlook to the Kintyre ridge, while the two rock outcrops are on the W-facing shoulder of the ridge, overlooking the Sound of Gigha, Jura and Islay beyond. The scheduled area comprises three separate circles, centred on the monolith and rock outcrops respectively. diameter, is centred on the westernmost rock outcrop; and the third, 6m in diameter, is centred on the easternmost rock outcrop. The area to be scheduled includes the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. Specifically excluded from the scheduling are the above-ground components of a post-and-wire fence adjacent to the monolith.

Statement of National Importance

Cultural Significance

The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows:

Intrinsic characteristics

The monolith may not be in its original position, but it retains significant intrinsic value because of the relatively good condition of the carved motifs and the overall design represented. Antiquarian accounts suggest it has not been disturbed since at least the 1930s. The unusual design includes: single cup-marks; kidney-shaped carvings formed from small groups of cup-marks; a single cup-mark with a concentric, crescent-shaped channel or part-ring; small groups of cup-marks joined by carved channels; and twin cup-marked designs joined by a single channel to form 'dumb-bell' shapes. The motifs appear to be spatially discrete, with few if any overlapping. The cups are between 35mm and 76mm in diameter and up to 19mm deep. The two ground-level rock outcrops are decorated with single cup-marks of around the same dimensions. Again, the individual cups are spatially discrete and do not overlap with each other.

Despite the vulnerable position of the outcrops at ground level and the location of the monolith at the side of a gateway, all of the carvings are in good condition. Excavations at similar outcropping sites in Argyll have uncovered further buried carvings and associated remains beyond the footprint of the visible panel, including further carvings, artefacts and environmental evidence. This may also be the case here. Any surviving remains associated with the carvings could help us understand the circumstances behind their creation and how the carved panels were used, as well as provide evidence for the nature of the local environment and vegetation at the time the carvings were produced.

In the case of all three panels, any development sequence or phasing of the carvings is difficult to determine because most of the components respect each other spatially. Collectively, however, they represent a significant undertaking by the person or people who carved these designs. As well as their high intrinsic value as decorated monuments, these carved panels can enhance our understanding of the carving process and techniques, the relationship between individual motifs and the overall designs, and the meaning and symbolism of the various motifs and designs.

Contextual characteristics

These three rock art panels are an interesting group, which could help illuminate the place and meaning of rock art in prehistoric life. Researchers have suggested that rock art panels are components of wider ritual landscapes and may have functioned at various levels: from the rock surface and decorated panel as an ancestral space; to the immediate area as a venue for ritual or ceremonial activity; to the wider landscape in which the panels are located and the likely connections they had with other broadly contemporary monuments. In this case, the presence of rock art motifs on a standing stone adds to the interest of this ceremonial monument.

The cup-mark motif is a Scotland-wide phenomenon. This group forms part of an unusually rich, regional concentration of rock art in Argyll, but the monolith includes some relatively uncommon motifs. Locally, these panels are part of a wider contemporary landscape along Kintyre, which includes similarly carved panels on monoliths and outcrops to the N and S, as well as other types of broadly contemporary monument, such as standing stones and chambered cairns (for example, 1.5km to the N). Along the Kintyre ridge alone, there are 25 or more recorded panels bearing similar motifs. Further N, in the wider Kilmartin area, there is an exceptionally dense concentration of over 250 panels. This rich assemblage of rock art indicates something of the significance which these enigmatic designs held for the prehistoric communities inhabiting Argyll. The North Beachmore carvings are located close to a water course and the two outcrops overlook natural land and seaward route-ways. These characteristics are common at rock art sites in Scotland, suggesting that landscape context and the proximity of natural resources were important factors in the positioning of rock art. Rock art is often sited at the junction of farmland and upland areas and may have marked the boundary between domesticated and wild landscapes. The North Beachmore carvings have the potential to enhance our understanding of the role of rock art in prehistoric life, both for those who carved the designs and those who used the sites.

National Importance

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, prehistoric rock art studies in Scotland and the context of rock art motifs in archaeological landscapes where contemporary burial and ceremonial monuments survive. The monument has the potential to enhance our understanding of the placing, meaning and function of decorated panels. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand rock art and its place in prehistoric society.

| Description             | This dun is situated at a height of 75m OD on a low ridge. Roughly rectangular on plan, it measures 17.5m by 13.5m within a wall 3.0m thick. The core of the wall has been severely robbed, but the outer face, which is composed of large blocks of stone up to 1.2m in length, can be traced intermittently on all four sides, while two short stretches of the inner face are visible on the NW. A gap in the centre of the SE side probably represents the original entrance, and a slab nearby, measuring 1.5m in length and 0.7m in thickness, may have been a lintel-stone. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1965. Dun Beachaire (name verified) is as described and planned by RCAHMS.Surveyed at 1:2500.Visited by OS (J B) 12 December 1977. |

| Description             | The remains of the Beacharra chambered long cairn, type- site for the round-bottomed pots which form one of the basic groups of Scottish Neolithic pottery. It stands on the spine of a ridge and was excavated in 1892 and re-examined by Scott in 1959 and 1961. At the present time the cairn is an oval grassy mound measuring about 21m by 15m, but it seems likely that it was originally trapezoidal on plan. The chamber was aligned approximately N and S and most of the stones are still visible protruding above the turf. On either side of the entrance, excavation revealed stretches of the facade which was built of dry-stone walling without orthostats, and was generally straight, although a slight outward curve visible towards the W end was probably repeated on the E. Similar walling was found over a distance of 7.3m on the W side of the cairn, and the platform on which it was set appeared to have been revetted with boulders to ensure stability. The burial-chamber, which was 6.25m long and between 1.2m and 1.5m broad, was divided into four parts, comprising three burial-compartments and a short passage or porch immediately inside the entrance. The entrance had probably been sealed with dry-stone walling, and in front of the facade there was a blocking of boulders and earth. It seems likely that during the final blocking the chamber, too, had been deliberately filled with earth. The burials, which may have been inhumations, had left no trace, but two pots were found in each of the three compartments. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1965; J G Scott 1964; A S Henshall 1972. This chambered cairn is generally as described by the previous authorities. The chamber and kerb no longer survive to the degree illustrated on the plan.         Surveyed at 1:2500.         (NR 6926 4330) Standing Stone (NR)         OS 6" map, (1924) The tallest standing stone in Kintyre, facing east and west and measuring 5.03m high and 1.4m by 0.8m at the base. | Description             | No description in Pastmap From OS 6" map, Argyllshire, 2nd ed., (1924) On a rocky knoll (75m OD) there is an oval dun which measures internally about 21.5m by 15m. The debris of the wall, which was probably some 4.3m thick, forms a low bank round the margin of the summit area of the knoll and a scree-like spread down the S and E flanks. Two short stretches of the outer face are visible, on the S and E respectively, and the entrance is indicated by a gap in the wall debris on the W. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960. The dun is as described and planned by RCAHMS (1971).Resurveyed at 1:10 000. Visited by OS (NKB) 30 January 1978. |

Cist and Standing Stones, Ballochroy.

In a level field 400 m NE. of Ballochroy farmhouse, and at a height of a little over 30 m O.D., there is a remarkable group of monuments consisting of a stone cist and three standing stones (Pl. 10A, B), all situated in a straight line running approximately NE. and SW.

The cist lies at the SW. end of the alignment and is constructed of five slabs, four of which form the sides and ends while the fifth is a massive cap-stone measuring 2.1 m by 1.5 m and 0.3 m in thickness. The internal dimensions are 1.7 m in length by 0.8 m in average breadth and about 0.6 m in depth; the longer axis is aligned NE. and SW. Much of the cist is visible above the surface of the field, the top of the cap-stone being 0.9 m above ground level. That the cist was formerly covered by a large cairn is evident from a sketch of the site made at the end of the 17th century (Lhuyd, pl. v(a)) and from former place-names (Colville 1930, 302 f), but no certain cairn-material is visible at the present time.

The most southerly of the three standing stones is situated 36.5 m NE. of the cist. It measures 0.6 m by 0.6 m at the base and rises fairly evenly to a height of 2.4 m before tapering to a pointed top at a maximum height of 3.4 m. The centre stone stands 3 m to the NE. and is 3 m high; it is a thin slab measuring 1.5 m by 0.3 m at ground level, with the longer axis aligned NW. and SE. The top slopes down steeply towards the NW. The NE. stone, which stands 2 m further to the NE., appears to have been broken off at the top. It measures 0.9 m by 0.3 m at the base and rises with a slight taper to a height of 2 m.

The fact that the cist is situated in close proximity to the standing stones, and on the same alignment, is hardly likely to be fortuitous, and it is possible that all four monuments are contemporary. For a possible analogy see No. 42 (Cairn, Machrihanish, NR62SW 2).

OS 6" map, (1924)

The most southerly of these three standing stones is situated 36.5m NE of cist NR75SW 2 (qv.). It measures 0.6m x 0.6m at the base, and rises fairly evenly to a height of 2.4m, before tapering to a pointed top, 3.4m high. The centre stone, 3.0m high, is 3.0m to the E. It is a thin slab, 1.5m x 0.3m at base, oriented NW-SE. The third stone, 2.0m NE appears to have been broken off at the top. It measures 0.9m x 0.3m at base, and rises with a slight taper to a height of 2.0m.

| Description             | The monument is a single standing stone situated in a forestry clearing on the southern slopes of Doire na h-Earbaige. It dates probably to the Neolithic or Bronze Age period, sometime between 4000 BC and 1500 BC. The monument was first scheduled in 1936, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. This stone stands at an angle, but measures 1.6m high (and would be as much as 1.8m if erect). It is 1.4m wide by 0.3m deep and its top is pointed. Traditionally known as Mackay's Cross (Crois Mhic Aoidh), the stone bears what appear to be two large 'M' characters carved in bold relief on its broad faces. The stone is aligned ENE to WSW. The area to be scheduled is circular on plan, to include the monument described above and an area around it within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. Cultural SignificanceThe monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows: Intrinsic characteristicsGiven the lack of any apparent disturbance to the stone or its immediate surroundings, Crois Mhic Aoidh represents a well-preserved example of its type and offers excellent potential for the survival of evidence relating to the erection of the stone and traces of the activities and rituals that may have been focussed here. The role of standing stones in prehistoric society and belief is presently not well understood and sites such as this offer excellent potential to enhance our understanding of the function and meaning of these monuments. In the case of Crois Mhic Aoidh, which survives within a well-preserved prehistoric landscape, there is also the potential to ascertain how this standing stone relates to domestic settlements and funerary sites, as well as other standing stones and stone circles in the vicinity. Contextual characteristicsCrois Mhic Aoidh stands about 0.6km to the SW of a stone circle on Beinn an Tuirc and there may have been a temporal and/or functional relationship between the two sites. This might | simply have depended on their inter-visibility within the landscape or, alternatively, Crois Mhic Aoidh may have played some role in the function of the Beinn an Tuirc stone circle.

Various theories have been put forward to explain the purpose of standing stones, which are distributed widely across Britain. These include that they were markers for astrological phenomena, or defined territorial boundaries, or commemorated significant events or individuals. The landscape surrounding Crois Mhic Aoidh contains a wide range of remains of prehistoric domestic settlement in the form of hut circles and field systems, as well as funerary and ritual monuments such as cairns, stone circles, standing stones and many cup-marked and cup-and-ring marked rock outcrops. Although not all contemporary, this dense distribution of prehistoric monuments highlights the considerable time-depth of the surrounding landscape and indicates that this area appears to have been of importance for many generations of people.

Associative characteristics

Local tradition recounts that when a disguised King Robert the Bruce was a fugitive in Kintyre, he was hospitably entertained by a farm tenant named Mackay, who proceeded to escort him to the ferry for Arran. On the way, they rested on a hill, where this standing stone now marks the spot, and the farmer pointed out the lands of Arnicle and Ugadale, noting them to be Crown lands. When the pair reached the ferry, the King revealed his true identity and thanked the man for his hospitality, giving him his brooch. Bruce added that should he come into his rights, he would give the farmer the lands of Arnicle and Ugadale. Bruce subsequently granted the lands to the man and his heirs and these estates remained the property of Mackay's descendants, the MacNeals of Losset, up to 1927. The Macneals still have in their possession the 'Bruce Brooch'. This is why the standing stone is known by the name 'Crois Mhic Aoidh', the Cross of Mackay.

Statement of National Importance

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular the ritual life of Neolithic and Bronze Age communities. Apparently undisturbed, the stone and its immediate surroundings offer excellent potential for the preservation of archaeological deposits relating to its erection and use, including any activities that may have been focussed on the site. There is also potential for the survival of evidence of the relationships between this monument and nearby standing stones and stone circles. The loss of the monument would diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the beliefs and rituals of Neolithic and Bronze Age communities.

| Description | This site was included within the RCAHMS Emergency Survey (1942-3), an unpublished rescue project. Site descriptions, organised by county, vary from short notes to lengthy and full descriptions and are available to view online with contemporary sketches and photographs. The original typescripts, manuscripts, notebooks and photographs can also be consulted in the RCAHMS Search Room. Information from RCAHMS (GFG) 10 December 2014. Cairn, Corriechevie. This impressive cairn (Pl. 9A), the largest surviving example in Kintyre, stands 200 m NW. of Corriechevie at a height of about 30 m O.D. It occupies the summit of a slight knoll situated on the brink of the scarp that overlooks the Tarbert-Campbeltown road to the W. Circular on plan, it measures 27.5 m in diameter and 5 m in height; no kerb is visible. Numerous quarry-scoops round the foot of the cairn, and several depressions on the top, indicate that a considerable quantity of stones has been removed from the original structure. But the damage so caused appears to be merely superficial, and the main body of the cairn material and any internal features are probably still undisturbed. RCAHMS 1971, visited May 1961 738540 CCXXiii |

| Description             | OS 6" map, (1924) This fort, occupying the summit of an isolated rocky knoll, measures 24.5m x 18.5m within a 6.1m thick wall, now reduced to a grass-covered stony bank, not more than 1.0m high. A number of facing stones are visible in situ as shown in plan. A subsidiary crest line, traceable all round the knoll except on the W, may represent the edge of a terrace made as a seating for the outer face of the wall. The exceptional wall thickness would allow for mural chambers and galleries but no trace of such structures are now visible. The entrance is in the E. A D-shaped enclosure, formed by a low bank, and measuring 27.5m x 9m internally is situated at the base of the knoll, immediately SE of the entrance. Without excavation it is impossible to assess its relationship to the fort. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1961. A dun, measuring 17.5m NE-SW by 9.0m within a wall up to 4.0m thick. Otherwise as described |

The rocky boss on the summit of Dun Ronachain is occupied by the slight remains of an oval dun. Its wall, much reduced by stone-robbing and quarrying, encloses an area 18.5m x 10.5m. The entrance, not now visible, may have been on the NE. At the present time approach from the SW is obstructed by a ditch-like hollow, 2.4m in depth. Though obviously artificial, it is not clear whether this feature is contemporary with the dun, or a surface quarry of no great age. It does not form an effective defence-work for the main structure, and if it is contemporary, it must have been left unfinished.

RCAHMS 1971, visited 1962.

The remains of a dun, generally as described by RCAHMS. The ditch on the SW is probably a contemporary unfinished work.

| Description             | The monument comprises a prehistoric dun likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500). It survives as the remains of a substantial sub-circular enclosure wall occupying the summit of a low knoll. The visible footprint of the monument covers an area approximately 21m in diameter, with the interior measuring around 13.5m by 12m. The monument is located at a height of 115m above sea level on a S-facing slope, to the NE of Ballochroy Glen, in an area of rough grazing. The monument was first scheduled in 1972, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The area to be scheduled is an irregular polygon on plan, defined in its southern half by the base of the rock outcrop on which the monument is sited and in its northern half by a modern fence line. The scheduled area includes the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, and adjoining land essential for the monument's support and preservation, as shown in red on the accompanying map. The scheduling specifically excludes the above-ground elements of the post-and-wire fence to the N, to allow for its maintenance. Statement of National ImportanceCultural Significance The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows: Intrinsic characteristics The dun occupies a rocky knoll with steep sides on the E, S, and SW, overlooking the right bank of an unnamed tributary of the Ballochroy Burn. It exploits the natural rock outcrop as its base and in the NE arc of its wall-circuit. Elsewhere the dun is defined by a low sub-circular, turf-covered stone wall, which is over 4m wide in places. A number of outer facing-stones have been reported protruding from the knoll some 1.8m below the summit. There are two breaks in the wall circuit, in the N and E arcs: that in the N is the likely position of the entrance. Several stones of the internal wall-face are visible through the vegetation. In the SE of the interior, a crescent-shaped stony bank is probably secondary; no other features are visible on the uneven surface of the interior. Material from the wall and the occupation of the dun is likely to survive both in buried layers on the knoll and down slope around the southern half of the monument. Overall, the footprint of the monument is intact and it survives in good condition. There is high potential for the survival of buried deposits and features beneath and beyond the wall and within the dun interior. Future examination of the dun could provide information about its date, form and construction, and investigation of the interior could contribute to our understanding of how it was used and how this may have changed over time. Buried artefacts and palaeoenvironmental evidence can contribute to our understanding of how people lived and worked, the extent and nature of trade and exchange, and the nature of the agricultural economy in this vicinity. The monument has the potential to contribute to our understanding of the nature of Iron Age settlement and the design and development of these small defended settlements. Contextual characteristics This dun is a type of defended settlement which characterises much of the coastal occupation |

of Argyll and Atlantic Scotland in later prehistory. These duns belong to a much broader category of later prehistoric settlement, which includes brochs, forts, crannogs, duns and hut circles. Altogether, over 500 later prehistoric settlements are known in Argyll. It is believed that duns represent the remains of living spaces of small groups or single families.

Duns are mainly a coastal phenomenon and tend to be located on locally high ground along prominent coastal routes or within easy reach of the coast. This example is unusual in having an inland position behind a network of duns along the western Kintyre coast. However, it is located on a natural route-way connecting the E and W coasts of Kintyre and has good views over the approaches to the dun. Researchers have suggested that duns did not exist in isolation, but were sited where they would be visible in the landscape and were often inter-visible with other duns or settlements. An Dunan may also have been part of a network of broadly contemporary sites spread across the Kintyre peninsula and with connections to similar strongholds beyond. The monument has good potential to contribute to our understanding of the later prehistoric occupation of Kintyre and further afield.

National Importance

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, the design and construction of later prehistoric defended settlements and their place in the wider economy and society. There is good potential for well-preserved archaeological remains to survive within the site. These buried remains can tell us much about the people who built and lived here and the connections they had with other groups. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the occupation of Argyll in the later prehistoric period.

| Description             | The monument consists of carved stones situated in Clachan churchyard. Seven stones and several fragments are standing within a stone shelter situated against the north wall of the graveyard. Other carved stones are situated throughout the graveyard. The monument is being rescheduled in order to define more clearly the extent of the scheduling. The present parish church at Clachan was erected in c.1760 and probably replaces an earlier building on the same site. The church appears to have been dedicated to St Colmanea or Columbanus, a contemporary of St Columba. All the stones apparently derive from the | churchyard, although none are in their original positions.

Within the stone shelter there are seven carved stones. Going from west to east there are:

1. A West Highland grave slab, dated to the 14th-15th century, fractured in the middle, with the top right and bottom left corners missing. It is decorated with a sword with a lobated pommel and inclined quillions.
2. A West Highland grave slab, dated to the 14th-early 16th century, fractured in the middle. It is decorated with a narrow panel filled with a leaf-scroll; the individual leaves with their stalks forming circles which fill the entire width of the panel.
3. A West Highland grave slab dated to the 14th-15th century, decorated with a sword with straight quillions and bulbous terminals.
4. A West Highland grave slab of the Kintyre School, dated to the 15th century. This is the best preserved of the carved stones within the graveyard. Within a double plain moulding there is a sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillions. On the right of the sword is foliage springing from two intertwined stems and terminating in twin beasts, and on the left a plain slip for an inscription. Below the slip there are a pair shears and two plain tablets. A secondary inscription has been cut into the stone in the late 17th or 18th century: it reads HERE L[YES] ARCHIBALD [?BROTHER] / TO RONALD MCALISTER OF DUN SKEIG.
5. A West Highland grave slab of the Iona School, dated to the 14th-early 16th century. The slab has a bevelled edge with nail-head moulding. It is decorated with a single row of foliage ornament. Cut around three sides of the margin of the stone there is a secondary inscription reading: THIS IS THE BURIEL PLACE OF RONALD MCALISTER OF DUN AND MARY MCNILL AND THEIR CHILDREN 1707.
6. A West Highland grave slab of the Kintyre School, dated to the 15th century. The stone has been covered with elaborate decoration but is now extremely worn.
7. An early Christian cross slab bearing a Latin cross and a ring cross, badly worn.

Within the churchyard there are other early Christian and Medieval carved stones:

1. In the NE corner of the graveyard, there is a recumbent early Christian cross slab below the gravestone of John Taylor, late tenant at Dalchairy. The cross is a hammerhead cross, with open arms and stem.
2. In the SW of the graveyard is an undecorated cruciform stone that serves as a headstone. This stone may be early Christian in date.
3. In the SW of the graveyard, below a head stone to Helen MacCallum, there is a recumbent West Highland grave slab with a plain border. Within the border is a crudely incised sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillions with bulbous terminals.
4. In the NE of the graveyard, there is a slab decorated with a crudely incised sword, now almost covered with turf.

Among the post-medieval churchyard monuments, one is of note. It bears a representation of a four-horse plough-team and commemorates Donald McGill, tenant in Cairnmore, who died in 1757.

The area to be scheduled measures 40m W-E by 35m N-S, as defined in red on the enclosed map. The scheduling excludes the modern structure of the stone shelter, the church and all modern burial lairs still in use.

| Description             | OS 6" map, (1925) A number of urns were found in this small mound a few years before 1875 (Ordnance Survey Name Book [ONB] 1875). It is very heavily overgrown with shrubs, but appears natural (RCAHMS 1971). A mutilated disc-headed cross stands on the summit of the mound. The only visible decoration on the opposite side of the stone is an incised line which may have formed part of a circle. (See also NR75NE 9) Name Book 1875; RCAHMS 1971, visited 1961 and 1962. Burials, Balinakill (Sites). Immediately S. of the junction of the public road with the drive leading to Balinakill there is a small mound on which stands the stone cross (RCAHMS 1971) No. 260. The mound is very heavily overgrown with shrubs, but appears to be a natural feature. It is reported (Name Book No. 11, p.47) that a number of "urns" were found in it during the 19th century, but no further details are known. RCAHMS 1971, visited May 1961. 767561 ccxii ("Tumulus") Reference (2001) RCAHMS; Early Medieval Sculpture in the West Highlands and Islands On a natural mound stands a mutilated cross, about 0.83m in visible height by 0.25m at base. The solid disc, about 0.6m in diameter, had square sunken armpits, but the arms are lost. I Fisher 2001. |

| Description | The monument comprises two groups of shieling huts of pre-Improvement date. The huts represent the remains of temporary dwellings used on a seasonal basis by farm-workers who migrated to upland pastures with their cattle during the summer months. It is likely that these dense concentrations of features represent the remains of seasonal activity that took place over a considerable period of time. This monument occupies an upland location on three small hillocks in forestry clearings at approximately 140m above sea level. The monument was originally scheduled in 1976, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The westernmost group of shieling huts consists of an extensive cluster of at least 42 small foundations, varying from approximately 2.7 by 2.1m to about 6.1 by 4.9m, within walls up to 0.9m thick. The foundations appear to be composed mainly of turf and stone. The majority of the huts are grouped around two small hills near an unnamed stream. In the SW section of the group lie the remains of a probable prehistoric roundhouse, about 12m in diameter. A later shieling hut constructed inside the roundhouse made use of its SE side. The easternmost group is located 180m to the SE, on the other side of the stream, and consists of the remains of at least 25 shieling huts located on a small hill. These again vary in size from around 2m by 2m to about 8m by 5m, within walls up to 0.9m thick. At least half of the hut foundations are built on small mounds, which themselves probably represent the remains of successive earlier huts. The area to be scheduled is irregular on plan and consists of two separate polygons to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. The scheduling specifically excludes the post-and-wire fence on the W side of the westernmost group of shielings. Statement of National ImportanceCultural Significance The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows: Intrinsic characteristics By their very nature, shieling huts tend to be less substantial than other types of structure and, therefore, less likely to survive. Overall, this group of shieling huts survives in reasonable condition, with the stone and turf-covered footings of the hut walls clearly visible. This cluster of features testifies to the practice of transhumance (seasonal agricultural activity) in the medieval and later period, which occurred over many decades and, possibly, centuries. Given the presence of so many huts in these two areas, the site may represent a larger summer settlement than usual, with a long duration of occupation and re-occupation. Many of the turf footings are sited on small mounds, which suggests that shieling huts may have been built and re-built on the same spots, in which case this site may have a longer and more complex development sequence than at first appears. Some of the huts have two 'rooms' and two seem to have three conjoined 'rooms'; these either represent multi-roomed huts or they may indicate different phases, with later huts built next to, rather than on top of, earlier structures. Future investigation of the site could enhance our understanding of the origins, use and re-use of seasonally occupied places and associated agricultural practices over a considerable length of time. It is likely that important archaeological deposits survive in and around the shieling huts, which could contribute towards our understanding of rural transhumance practices in Argyll and more generally in Scotland during the medieval and later period. Archaeological evidence for the internal layout of the huts, the remains of any fittings and furniture, and for the | construction, use and re-use of the shieling huts is likely to survive below ground. As an example, excavated shieling huts elsewhere have produced accumulated deposits of ash near their entrances, resulting from the periodic cleaning out of internal hearths. Scientific analysis of such remains could greatly enhance our understanding and appreciation of the dating and occupation sequence of the site. The probable prehistoric roundhouse is likely also to preserve important information about the nature of domestic life and agricultural practices carried out on this same hillside a thousand years or more before it began to be used for summer shielings.

Contextual characteristics

The monument represents the remains of an important group of shieling huts, which can be compared with other examples in Argyll. Shieling huts and the use of summer pastures were part of a long-lived seasonal practice in parts of rural Scotland. Occasionally, whole villages would relocate from their 'winter town' to the shielings or 'summer town'. Because of their function and seasonality, shielings are often located in remote upland regions. The huts were normally sited on small hills near fresh water, in good positions for monitoring the whereabouts and wellbeing of cattle and carrying out dairying activities. The huts themselves were built of wood or stone, and covered in turfs dug from the hill. They often contained a room with a hearth on one side and a sleeping area on the other; a separate room or cupboard was often used to store dairy produce and supplements, such as fish bones for the cattle. Textual sources suggest that children and young women primarily carried out these activities, and that time spent at the shieling was often welcomed as the occupants were away from the watchful eye of parents and village elders.

Shieling traditions and, specifically, hut construction seem to vary regionally, which at least partly reflects the availability of different building materials. The shieling huts at Talatoll survive as stone and turf footings, which suggests they were constructed primarily from timber and turf. Typically, they are grouped on a small hill in a wide valley and located next to a stream. Comparative study of the form, construction and location of this group of shieling huts with others across Argyll and further afield can enhance our knowledge and understanding of regional and national variations in transhumance practices and the range of vernacular buildings.

National Importance

The monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular the positioning, function and construction of upland shielings, their place in the social and economic organisation of the time, and changes in rural land-use and agricultural practices from the medieval period to the early 19th century. The relatively good state of preservation of this group of shieling huts enhances this potential. The probable inclusion of a prehistoric roundhouse within the shieling group adds to the archaeological interest and importance of the monument. The loss of the monument would affect our ability to understand rural settlement and land-use from the pre-Improvement period in both Argyll and Scotland.

| Description             | The monument is a prehistoric standing stone likely to date to the third or second millennium BC. It survives as an upstanding monolith which tapers towards its top. The stone stands c 2m high with a slight lean and measures approximately 0.8m by 0.4m at its base. The standing stone is located in a conifer plantation on the N side of a metalled track. It sits at 130m above sea level and overlooks Loch Ciaran to the S. The monument was first scheduled in 1936, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The area to be scheduled is circular on plan, measuring 8m in diameter, centred on the standing stone. The scheduling includes the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. Statement of National Importance Cultural Significance The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows: Intrinsic characteristics This standing stone survives in good condition and is a fine representative of its class. The stone appears intact, undisturbed and in its original position. Lichens cover approximately 60% of the visible surface. An inscription carved relatively recently on its E face comprises five, capitalised and punctuated serif letters: J.K.S.M.T. There is good potential for the survival of archaeological deposits and features relating to the stone's erection and use, possibly including burial deposits and associated artefacts, and environmental information. It is highly likely that the stone's socket and related archaeological deposits are undisturbed. This standing stone has the potential to enhance our understanding of the function of standing stones in the later Neolithic and Bronze Age, and to provide important information about the landscape, climate and vegetation at the time the stone was erected. Its position within the landscape is undoubtedly significant and merits further analysis. It could further our understanding of the positioning of standing stones and other ritual monuments in relation to each other and in the landscape, and of the significance of these monuments to the societies that built and used them. |

Standing stones are a widespread and long-lived phenomenon in Scotland, and are sometimes all that survives of more elaborate and extensive monuments, such as stone circles, alignments or avenues. Single standing stones are particularly numerous in Argyll, with more than 180 recorded.

Significant effort would have been required to transport, position and erect the stone, which suggests that both this activity and this location were important to those who erected it here. The locations of standing stones often appear to have been selected to take advantage of views and inter-visibility with other monuments, or on natural route-ways. Many are visible from great distances and perhaps mark a significant area or territory. Standing stones may have been part of a network of related landmarks. They are often located with reference to other ritual or burial monuments, such as henges, stone circles or cairns, and may themselves have formed part of some ceremonial or ritual activity. Together these types of monuments appear to reflect a complex system of belief and ritual practices involving burial and commemoration of the dead, spiritual ceremonies and celestial observations.

The Loch Ciaran standing stone is unusual in that it appears to be a relatively isolated example, with few recorded prehistoric monuments in the vicinity, although its current location within a conifer plantation probably masks its full context and associations. It lies 180m W of the NE end of Loch Ciaran, and around 4km from the nearest coastline on the Sound of Gigha.

Associative characteristics

The inscription on the E face is relatively recent, but testifies to people's continuing interest in the stone through the ages. The standing stone is shown adjacent to a track or roadway on the Ordnance Survey 2nd edition map.

This monument is of national importance as a well-preserved example of a common type of ritual or ceremonial monument dating to the late Neolithic or Bronze Age. The standing stone has the potential to tell us more about the activities that took place at sites such as this, as well as the wider beliefs and lifestyles of the prehistoric people who erected and used standing stones. The loss of this example would significantly impede our ability to understand the nature of prehistoric ritual practices, activities, beliefs and social organisation in Argyll and further afield.

Description

The monument comprises the fragmentary remains of the Cistercian Saddell Abbey, which lie on a slightly raised promontory immediately above the confluence of Saddell Water and Allt nam Manach. The proximity of the conventual buildings to the latter stream suggest that it was used for drainage purposes. The monument is being rescheduled better to define the extent of the scheduled area, to increase the area up to the bank of the river, and to exclude the footprint of the house known as Allt Nam Manach.

The buildings originally consisted of a church, with an aisleless nave and choir and north and south transepts, together with three main ranges of conventual buildings grouped around a cloister on the south side of the church. Only the presbytery and the north transept of the church, and part of the south claustral range, survive as standing remains. All the exposed masonry is constructed of random rubble laid in lime mortar.

The presbytery measures 7.5m in length and 5.5m in width within walls some 0.9m in thickness. Part of the south wall rises to a height of 4.6m but elsewhere the walls are reduced to a height of between 0.9m and 1.5m above the existing ground-level.

The surviving, north, transept measures 7.2m in length by about 6.1m in width within walls some 1.2m thick. Apart from the remains of a large window-opening in the north gable, there appear to have been two smaller windows in the east wall. The discrepancy in thickness between the walls of the presbytery and transept, coupled with the fact that the east wall of the transept abuts the north wall of the presbytery, indicates that the transept is an addition.

Of the claustral buildings only the central portion of the south range now survives. This structure, which probably represents the undercroft of the refectory, measures about 7m E/W by 4.6m transversely within walls some 1.1m thick. There are the remains of a small deeply-splayed window in the south wall and of opposed entrance doorways at the east end, where a transverse wall has been built at a comparatively recent period. The north doorway is represented by its west jamb and draw-bar socket, together with part of the arch-springing. The south doorway retains its west jamb and draw-bar socket. The building was used as a burial-place in the post-Reformation period.

What little is known of the history of Saddell Abbey comes largely from a 16th-century confirmation charter of a number of early writs. The founder is usually said to have been Reginald, son of Somerled, who succeeded his father in the lordship of Kintyre in 1164 and died in 1207. A 13th-century list of Cistercian houses, however, which in other respects seems to be reliable, attributes the foundation to the year 1160, when the founder would presumably be Somerled. The character of Romanesque ornament on some fragments preserved in Campbeltown Museum suggests that building operations began well before the end of the 12th century. A late 14th-century document in the Vatican archives shows that Saddell was a daughter house of Mellifont, in the diocese of Armagh, itself founded in about 1142. The community was probably small in numbers and the recorded endowments are not extensive. Most of the property held was in Kintyre, but the monastery also had possessions in Gigha, Knapdale, Carrick and Arran.

In or before 1507 James IV proposed that the Abbey should be united to the bishopric of Argyll, claiming that the place had seen no monastic life within living memory. This step having been taken, the lands of Saddell were erected into a free barony and David Hamilton, Bishop of Argyll, began the construction of a castle on a site adjacent to the monastery. Considerable remains of the abbey buildings seem to have survived until about 1770, when they were extensively quarried to provide building materials for a court of offices at Saddell Castle and for other estate purposes.

Fourteen graves slabs, dating to the 14th to early 16th century, are as described in the Royal Commission Argyll Inventory Vol 1 (1971), 296, nos 2 to 15. Numbers 2 to 13 are in the recently constructed stone shelter along with a recently discovered stone of blonde sandstone which was uncovered during conservation works. The latter is a 14th-century graveslab, broken into two pieces (50cm long by 49cm wide and 82cm long and 46cm wide, and 0.15m thick). There is a relief figure of a warrior carrying a spear, shown standing in profile within a niche centrally placed on the stone. Underneath the warrior figure are the remains of a sword on a stepped base. There are traces of foliate and interlace design on the stone but it is very weathered and the details could not be deciphered.

The area to be scheduled is an irregular area with maximum dimensions 212m E/W by 82m N/S, as marked in red on the accompanying map. It includes the remains of the abbey and the graveyard and the collection of stones in the stone shelter, along with an area within which archaeology associated with the abbey and the graveyard might be expected to survive. An area is marked in red within the scheduled boundary, showing the exclusion of the footprint of the house named Allt Nam Manach. Also excluded from scheduling are the stone shelter for the stones; the boundary walls; any burial lairs within the graveyard which are still in active use; the top 30cm of all paths and tracks; and the top 30cm of deposits of the area outside the graveyard boundary.

Statement of National Importance

The monument is of national importance as the only Cistercian abbey to be founded from Ireland, and for its connections with Somerled, first Lord of the Isles. The archaeological remains have the potential to provide important information about the ecclesiastical architecture and monastic life of a small 12th-century Cistercian abbey. The site is also important for its outstanding collection of 14th to early 16th-century carved stones which have the potential to contribute to our understanding of ecclesiastical organisation, funerary practices and the production of monumental sculpture in western Scotland in the medieval period.

Description OS 6" map, Argyllshire, 2nd ed., (1924)

A fort measuring about 27.5m by 23m within a single wall is situated at a height of 50m OD in Pluck Wood. From the N the approach is almost level, while on the other three sides the fall of the ground is not particularly steep. Round the NW half of the perimeter the wall has been reduced to a stony scarp, but elsewhere it is represented by a band of debris up to 4.3m thick, in which two stretches of the outer face are visible. On the E the face still stands to a height of 1.1m in three courses and is constructed of large slabs. The position of the entrance is not apparent.

The only features in the interior are a comparatively recent wall, itself now ruinous, and a cairn which was erected in 1935.

RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960.

The fort is as described and planned by RCAHMS (1971). A further length of ruinous, relatively recent walling is to be seen immediately N of the modern cairn.

Surveyed at 1:10 000.

Visited by OS (JB) 23 February 1978.

Note (13 October 2014 - 23 May 2016)

Atlas of Hillforts of Britain and Ireland

This small oval fortification measures only 27m by 23m internally (0.05ha) within a wall reduced to a band of rubble about 4.3m in thickness, and while two runs of outer facing constructed of large slabs can be seen, it occupies a weak position and should not be considered a fort. Its identification by RCAHMS investigators is a manifestation of the problems of morphological classification of small drystone structures in an area where the only categories available were fort and dun, and the interior of this example exceeds the size range they employed to define duns. Had it been situated on a strong topographical feature it would have qualified under the definitions employed by the Atlas. In essence this is a fortified settlement enclosure.

| Description | OS 6" map, Argyllshire, 2nd ed., (1924) On a steep-sided rocky knoll 12m high, situated a few metres inland from high-water mark at Rubha nan Sgarbh, there is a dun measuring internally 27.5m in length by 10.5m in maximum width. The dun has been defended by a wall 3.7m in thickness, of which one stretch of the inner face and several stretches of the outer face are preserved in situ as shown on the plan. In some places the outer facing-stones lie as much as 2.1m below the margin of the summit area, while at one point on the NNE the wall is carried across a natural cleft in the knoll on a foundation of stones 5m in depth. The entrance, which is on the E is well preserved and measures 1.5m in width. Originally access to it was gained by means of a gully which leads up to the steep ESE flank of the knoll, but at the present time the gully is choked with tumbled debris and terminates in a sheer drop of 3m to the shore below. The interior of the dun is featureless. Part of the flat upper stone of a rotary quern found in the debris of the wall on the date of visit is now in Campbeltown Museum. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960. The dun is as described and planned by RCAHMS (1971). Surveyed at 1:10 000. Visited by OS (JB) 24 Febr NR 7975 3402 Site identified as part of a coastal zone assessment survey. M Cressey, S Badger, 2005. |

the E side of Portrigh Strip, 640m S of Carradale. The work was probably oval on plan with maximum internal measurements of 70m from N to S by 61m from E to W, but the W side lies within the wood and is not visible on the photographs. At the time of the visit, shortly after the hay had been cut, the ditch was clearly marked by a belt of clover about 3.5m in width. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1955; Information from RCAHMS 6" map.

No trace of this feature was seen at the time of visit, when the field was in pasture.

(Vitrified) (NR)

OS 6" map, Argyllshire, 2nd ed., (1924)

On the summit of Carradale Point, at a height of 15m OD, there is a vitrified fort measuring 56.5m by 23m internally. The site occupies the middle of an elongated peninsula which is cut off from the adjacent mainland at high tide.

The fort defences comprise a continuous wall (A on the RCAHMS {1971} plan) with outworks (B-H) presumably designed to restrict access to the site. Wall A is now represented for the most part by a low grass-grown bank about 4.5m in thickness, from which large masses of vitrified core-material protrude as shown on the plan. A stretch of the outer face of the wall, measuring 8m in length, has survived in situ on the WNW, while, on the date of visit, it was found that the outer facing-stones at the SE angle of the fort had recently been exposed. Christison (1898) noted a considerable length of the outer face on the NW, but this is no longer visible. The masses of vitrified wall-core on the E side of the fort present a striking appearance attaining in some cases a height of 1.5m above the level of the exterior; on the SW, however, where no vitrified material is evident on the surface of the bank, six separate masses have been dislodged from the wall and lie a short distance away in the interior of the fort.

A gap in the bank between two large vitrified masses on the SE may indicate the position of the entrance. The interior contains several sinuous scarps which may be the result of surface quarrying undertaken during the construction of the fort.

Outside the fort a grass-grown stony bank (B), measuring 5.5m in thickness and 0.6m in height, runs up the slope from a rocky gully on the SE to join the fort wall a few yards S of the supposed entrance. That this bank represents a later development is suggested by the discovery, referred to above, that the two structures are not bonded together but meet in a straight joint; the purpose of this addition was possibly to secure the entrance against attack from the S. Approach to the fort from this and other directions was likewise impeded by short lengths of walling which blocked the natural gullies leading up from the shore; these are now represented either by stretches of outer facing-stones (C, D and F) or merely by bands of rubble core (E, G and H). An oval depression, some 7.5m outside the N end of the fort, is not mentioned by Christison (1898) in his account of the site, and is probably of recent origin.

D Christison 1898; RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960.

The vitrified fort is as described and planned by RCAHMS (1971).

A small, possibly natural, penannular enclosure 4.0m internal diameter, lies just outside the south wall of the fort. It incorporates on the S side the lump of vitrification shown by the RCAHM, but this may be simply tumble from the fort wall.

Surveyed at 1:10 000.

Atlas of Hillforts of Britain and Ireland

This heavily vitrified fort is situated on the summit of Carradale Point, a narrow spit of land projecting southwards on the E side of Carradale Bay. Oval on plan, it measures 56.5m from N to S by 23m transversely (0.1ha) within a wall reduced to a bank of rubble which is up to 4.5m thick and contains large masses of vitrified wall core, particularly along its E side. A gap on the SSE is possibly an entrance, shielded on the southern side by a spur wall dropping down from the S end of the fort to the rocks on the shore, though a line of transverse face within the body of this spur possibly indicates that it is an addition. There are also other fragments of walls visible blocking gullies that would otherwise have provided access at several points on the N, W and S, effectively creating an outer fortified enclosure measuring about 140m in length from N to S by 45m in breadth (0.5ha). It is assumed that these walls are contemporary with the inner fort.

| Description             | The monument is the remains of a medieval castle located on the summit of a rock outcrop looking E over Kilbrannan Sound towards Arran. The visible remains comprise the fragments of | a stone curtain wall that appears originally to have enclosed the entire summit, an irregular pentagonal area measuring 67m N-S by 24m transversely. The curtain wall has a thickness of about 1.5m and now rises to a maximum height of 3.4m where it acts as a retaining wall on the E side of the site. The ground falls away steeply from the summit on all sides except the NW, where there is a hollow that probably represents a broad flat-bottomed ditch. The castle lies about 300m S of Carradale Harbour and 100m inland at about 20m above sea level. The monument was originally scheduled in 1972, but an inadequate area was included to protect the remains and the documentation did not meet modern standards: the present scheduling rectifies this.

The scheduled area is an irregular shape on plan, to include the remains described above and an area around them in which evidence for the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map.

Statement of National Importance National Importance

The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows:

Intrinsic characteristics

Airds Castle was held by the Lords of the Isles until its forfeiture to the Crown in the late 15th century. Although its date of construction is not known, researchers believe all the existing remains are of medieval character. The principal entrance was probably situated towards the centre of the W side and reached by a track that climbs the W slopes of the outcrop; an apparent gap in the E wall may mark the site of a postern-gateway. Although there are no visible traces of any internal buildings, it is highly likely that significant archaeological deposits and features survive below ground level. These have high potential to inform us about the construction, use and development of the castle, including the layout, character and date of the buildings. The site has considerable potential to provide information about the daily lives of the occupants and about the changing character of structures and occupation over several hundred years. The likely survival of artefacts and ecofacts would also enhance our knowledge: there is particular potential for their recovery in a small circular reed-grown depression on the summit that may represent the site of a well, in the ditch to the NW, and in the deep hollow below the curtain wall to the E.

Contextual characteristics

The castle stands in a commanding position on the E coast of Kintyre; a strategic location that would have enabled its occupants to control the Kilbrannan Sound between Kintyre and Arran, which is particularly significant given the importance of the sea during the medieval period. It lay close to the boundary between lands controlled by the Lords of the Isles and those held by the Scottish king. There is particular potential to compare Airds Castle with Skipness Castle, which is located about 20 km away at the N end of the sound and was the administrative centre of a considerable barony, one of the great medieval lordships of Kintyre. There is also potential to study this monument in the context of several other important W coast castles, among them Castle Sween, Lochranza Castle, Dunstaffnage Castle and Rothesay Castle. Such comparisons give this monument considerable potential to inform our understanding of the nature of lordship, control and the wider operation of medieval society.

Associative characteristics

The castle seems to have come into the possession of the Crown at the end of the 15th century following the forfeiture of John, Lord of the Isles. In 1498 James IV granted the 'Fortalicium de Ardcadane', together with other property in the same area, to an Ayrshire landholder, Sir Adam Reid of Stairquhite and Barskimming. In the middle of the 16th century the same lands formed part of the barony of Bar, in North Kintyre, then held by the MacDonalds of Dunnyveg. In 1605 they were again in the possession of the Reids of Barskimming.

The site of the castle is marked 'Airds Castle (Ruin)' on the Ordnance Survey 1st edition map.

National Importance

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, particularly the construction, defences and domestic life of a west coast medieval castle. The visible remains of the curtain wall are augmented by buried archaeology, and there is potential for the survival of organic remains that may be preserved in a well and ditch. The monument can enhance the written history of the Lords of the Isles by providing data on trade and exchange, economy and the details of everyday life. Its loss would impede our ability to understand the medieval castles of Argyll and Bute and their role in the exercise of power by the Lords of the Isles.

Statement of Special Interest

Built for James Macalister Hall of Tangy and Killean, who purchased the estates in 1873 and 1875 respectively. The old house at Killean had stood on the site of the garden cottages and was burned whilst under reconstruction in 1875.

Upgraded to Category A 27 April 1992.

| Description             | 1921-2. Oliver Hill, architect. Large, outstanding Arts and Crafts house in an English Mediaeval style. Two storeyed. Whinstone rubble walls and chimneys. Purbeck stone slates. Steel casement windows. Roughly symmetrical entrance front, flanked by round towers and short wings, has door to entrance lobby behind which is a large Hall. There is a Library to the East of | the Hall and a long rear wing to the West. In the re-entrant angle is a terrace.

Statement of Special Interest

An astonishing country house designed by the English architect, Oliver Hill, for J B Gray, a shipping magnate, on the site of an old farmhouse. Hill's drawings at the RIBA include unexecuted drawings for the house by H E Clifford (who built the replacement farmhouse nearby). The house is built of grey-green whin stone, which was quarried on site and appears to grow out of the landscape, especially the entrance elevation where the roofs of low single-storey side wings contrive to give the impression that the house is rising out of the ground. The rear elevation, which faces over steeply falling ground towards the sea, has a more monumental aspect. The architectural massing and composition is vigorously well-handled and strongly influenced by the works of Lutyens, who was a family friend, with heavy battered masonry, horizontal bands of mullioned windows and a strong and varied roof line. Yet while the house is a powerful example of Arts and Crafts architecture, it also looks forward to the modernism that was to mark out Hill's career in the 1930's. While the stone slates and thick masonry give the impression of a traditional building, modern materials were also employed, such as steel window frames and cement pointing (the latter causing severe problems of water penetration). The interior is notable for its generosity of space and Arts-and-Crafts detailing. A perspective drawing of the house was commissioned from F L Griggs by Hill, and exhibited at the Royal Academy. Change of category from B to A, 25 September 2006.

| Description             | (NR 8079 4435) About 90m NW of the bridge that carries the public road over the Allt Sunadale at Grogport, and at a height of 10m OD, there are the remains of a cist known locally as "The Sailor's Grave". It measures 1.2m by 0.74m internally with the long axis aligned roughly N and S, and is built of thin slabs, measuring between 0.08m and 0.18m in thickness; the side slabs are each 1.4m long and slightly overlap the N and S end-slabs, which are 0.7m and 0.5m long respectively. The cap-stone, which projects about 0.05m above ground, is broken, and two portions of it now partially cover the cist, one at either end, with a gap of 0.4m between them. The interior is filled with rubble and the remaining fragments of the cover slab. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1963; Information from D Colville 1960; Information from RCAHMS 6" map. |

(NR 8081 4430) Cairn with cist exposed.

Information from RCAHMS 6" map; Information from R B K Stevenson September 1972.

A turf-covered cairn, with a cist exposed, it situated on the edge of a steep bank along the NE side of a stream. It measures 10.5m NW-SE by 9.0m transversely and 0.7m high. Slightly mutilated in the SE quadrant, but the centre appears undisturbed. Part of the SW quadrant of the cairn has slipped into the stream revealing a cist measuring 0.8m NE-SW by 0.5m transversely, and 0.5m deep. It is placed on the pan with no apparent bottom lining. The SW end-stone is missing, but the remaining sides and capstone are in situ.

hill. Ten platforms cut into the hillside cover an area quarter of a mile square between 30m and 100m asl. Diameters vary from 8m to 10.5m.

A narrow trench cut on one platform revealed a hard gritty floor. A post-hole, 25cms deep, and two socket holes each 8cms deep were cut into it.

E B Rennie 1974a; 1974c; M Daniels 1974.

Centred at NR 797 368, along the east and south-east slopes of Cnoc na Dippen in an area of heather and scrub, some fifteen circular or oval platforms, scooped into the hill-slope, can be identified. They vary in size from 7.5m by 6.5m to 10.0m by 8.5m; the longer axis of the oval platforms is in each case parallel to the contour. In a number of instances a 'gap' between the back and front scarps, at the change of slope, probably indicates the entrance. The back and front scarps achieve a maximum height of 0.8m. In a few examples some stone, possibly of a revetment, is visible in the front scarp.

The date and purpose of these platforms remains uncertain. In their size, shape and disposition they strongly resemble early hut platforms similar to the 'unenclosed' settlements of Peebleshire. The trial excavations of E B Rennie and M Daniels (1974) revealing 'a hard gritty floor... a post hole... and two socket holes' tend to corroborate this classification.

There appear to be a number of lynchets associated with the platforms, and there is a possibility that some of the natural terracing of the hillslope, noticeably at NR 797 370, may have been accentuated by cultivation.

Conversely in a number of the platforms the back scarp is unusually sharp inferring a more recent construction. This possibility is further supported by the apparent breaching of a medieval or post-medieval field bank by one of the scooped platforms at NR 7979 3665. The margins of this platform, however, are ill-defined compared with the others, and it may in fact be the result of surface quarrying. They may be charcoal- burning platforms, but there is a marked absence of black earth which one might expect.

Surveyed at 1:2500.

Visited by OS (JB) 16 March 1978.

There are 19 Platforms within an area of 1 hectare. They are all apparently earth banked. They are graded in size - viz 1 of 10m, 2 of 9.1m, 5 of 8.2m, 5 of 7.3m, 4 of 6.4m, and 1 of 5.5m. They all lie between the 50m contour and the 120m contour. 1 quadrant of Platform 12 was excavated in July. It had a diameter of 9.1m, and lay at 80m OD under a heather cover. On excavation there was no evidence of burning to make charcoal but an extremely hard floor with charcoal patches was uncovered. Post holes were found above the lip at the front and sides but no post holes were centrally placed in the floor. However the charcoal patches were in the position, where roof-support post holes would have been expected. There was a probable palisade ledge below the front lip forming a 'stepped' construction.

No finds were collected but charcoal was taken from the floor and will be sent for dating.

| Description             | An unfinished millstone measuring about 1.5m in diameter and 0.3m. in thickness lies in the turf 400m N of Rhonadale farmhouse and just outside a Forestry Commission plantation. The exposed face of the stone and the central orifice show drill-marks, and this suggests that the millstone is of 18th or 19th century date. Part of what appears to be a second millstone may be seen protruding through the turf in the immediate vicinity of the first. Both stones were probably quarried from the adjacent rock-face to the N; they may have been intended for use at the mill that formerly existed at Rhonadale. Visited June 1967. RCAHMS 1971.As described. Visited by OS 16 March 1978. |

| Description | WoSAS V - Probably of National Importance |

In December 1985 charcoal layers and pits were noticed in the river bank where a loop of the Carradale Water has been enlarged and altered in shape over the past 20 years. Site 'A' presents a solid black layer of charcoal sloping steeply down from the present ground level for more than a metre and leveling out just above boulder clay. Following the same direction is a broad band of brown soil containing charcoal and fragments of human bone. A hammer-stone and part of a flat centrally pierced stone disc were retrieved from the brown layer and from the clay below it enough sherds to complete the profile of a 14cm. diameter plain, flat-based vessel, probably late Bronze Age. One rim sherd of a larger pot was found in a fall of earth. Site 'B' is about 50m distant and separated by a fast eroding neck of land and consists of two pits, one U-shaped and the other tilted bowl-shape. Both contain heat split stones in a matrix of soil and charcoal. The limits of the second appear to be defined by unburned stones and there is a deposit of similar rubble in the middle with pieces of charcoal up to 1cm. in size amongst it. A third layer is just appearing between the two.

G Siggins 1986.

Four hearths eventually appeared at Site B and evidence of iron making, though no visible smelter yet identified. Erosion over winter 1986-87 and since, has revealed a scatter of charcoal continuing northwards from the hearths and round a newly formed promontory where a pile of large stones was exposed on a broad terrace of iron stained gravel which overlies clay beds containing an abundance of well-preserved vegetation - leaves, twigs, nuts, etc., 2m-3m below present ground level. A similar pile of stones was lifted by JCB during drainage operations two fields away to the N this summer. At present these piles of stones, though suggesting a collapsed structure can only be described as 'interesting'. Pit 5, recently located, differs from the others. It seems disturbed; there are concentrations of charcoal and stones at one side and pink-red burned clay in the centre. A forked branch passes through the pit (cf Pit B3).

G Siggins 1987.

The Carra Water has continued to destroy two sides of this field. This year a third area of interest 'C', has been added to 'A'. 'A' still yields charcoal and fragments of calcined bone - human and animal - and last December a sherd of coarse, brownish-grey pottery was found on a gravel bank in front of it. Of a total of six features at 'B' between December 1985 and December 1987 only a hearth and a large pit remain. The latter, B5, is roughly V shaped and contains a mixture of debris such as decayed wood, stones and patches of burned soil and charcoal.

It is unlike the more structured pits and hearths, now destroyed which were associated with ironmaking. A C14 date of 2370+- 100 bp (GU2410) was obtained from B5. 'C' has appeared in the crumbling river terrace to the east of 'A' and consists of a dark line, 3-4cms thick, running some 30cms below the surface of the field. A small trench, dug well away from the edge of the river cutting showed that a compacted layer containing a few flakes of charcoal and fragments of iron continues under the field. The layer is interrupted by old drainage ditches from an adjoining field.

NR 792 386 There have been no developments at parts 'A' and 'C' but in October 1988 rough weather with flooding completely covered 'B' with sand almost levelling it with the field that overlies the occupations. At the same time new features appeared in section in the riverbank on a third side of the field where a large promontory had been washed away the previous spring, 'D'. These consist of a v-shaped pit of brown soil with some charcoal and a few stones; a 3m long horizontal band of irregular depth containing charcoal scatters and pockets, and a very dense scoop-shaped deposit of blackened soil with large pieces of charcoal and projections above and below as if wooden stakes had been burned in situ. There is also an intrusion of soft red clay some 2m wide at its top which interrupts the otherwise undisturbed layers of terrace material. Though this appears natural (red clay occurs in quantity further down river and was used for various purposes in the recent past), flecks of charcoal can be seen on close inspection throughout the deposit and a substance like slightly hardened clay runs through it in two places to the bottom where it spreads as if poured and set.

Small finds at 'D' include a few fragments of iron and some slag plus other evidence of iron making activity and a sherd of worn, buff-coloured pottery. From shallow water where 'B' and 'D' conjoin the upper stone of a rotary quern was retrieved, much waterworn but complete with hopper and handle hole. It was supported on its edge against a heavy stone block which has one flat surface - possibly a saddle quern. On a gravel bank in front of 'B' a wedge-shaped fragment of a possible spindle quern was also found, a piece of iron still in place at what would have been the centre.

G Siggins 1989a.

There have been more episodes of severe flooding than usual over the past twelve months. Parts 'A' and 'C' have not been greatly affected, being more sheltered from the full onslaught of the weather, but the stretch of 'B' which had contained the most impressive and undisturbed evidence for ironmaking no longer exists. The features at 'D', including two post holes which appeared later, have also gone, though there is still a good deal of thickly scattered charcoal where 'D' merges with the remains of 'B'. A black line has now appeared in the northward continuation of the riverbank from 'D'; this is interrupted by a square sectioned possible socket, a pointed post hole, and a small pit of irregular shape and there is some charcoal at its furthest extent.

A geophysical survey by HBM shows that areas of possible archaeological interest may yet lie beneath the remainder of the field and it is hoped these will be investigated by excavation in due course.

A concentration of archaeological features at Achnasavil, Carradale, which has been recorded since 1985, is being rapidly destroyed by river erosion. Limited excavations were carried out in 1991 in order to date and characterise the nature of the site. Four periods of activity have been identified: cultivation in the Neolithic period; an occupation in the early Bronze Age; a domestic settlement in the late Bronze Age; and an Iron Age occupation. A programme of morphological mapping and dating of valley floor terraces in lower Carradale showed that the present day flood plain of the Carra Water was created by the early Neolithic period and the morphology of the valley floor has changed little since that time.

S Carter and R Tipping 1993.

Four small areas were excavated to investigate features revealed by river erosion over a number of years. A radiocarbon date of 2370 +/- 100 bp has been obtained from a previously recorded pit fill. Groups of plough truncated post holes and shallow pits were located but very few finds were recovered. A substantial though poorly preserved prehistoric site is indicated. Further charcoal samples have been submitted for dating.

Following excavations in the field overlying the occupation, and a riverbank fall, a post hole packed with stones and two irregular-shaped pits were exposed. A well-worn whetstone and a convex flint scraper were also found in tumble at this point.

G Siggins 1991a.

A stone-filled pit in the riverbank 13m N of the original 1985 find extends to 80cm beneath the field. The stones are packed in with small, thin ones filling gaps. One extra large stone is well-bedded and quite stable after several months of protruding from the riverbank. Among the stones is black soil with pockets of charcoal; a few bone fragments and a small sherd were also found. A band of dark soil with small stones is appearing 1.20m to the S - a quite separate feature.

Radiocarbon dates in 1991 (supra) show that the site was under cultivation in the Neolithic and occupied early and late in the Bronze Age; with the Iron Age radiocarbon date obtained from features now destroyed by erosion, the multi-period nature of the site is now established. G Siggins 1992.

| Description             | Loch a Chuirn or Loch Carran (name given on estate map). The former spelling (that given by local people) means Cairn Loch. Name Book, Argyll. A thorough search, assisted by Mr and Mrs JG Scott, Glasgow, failed to reveal any trace of a cairn and local enquiry failed to elicit any information. A stone-built sheep-fank at NR 7880 4681 might have been constructed from the stones of a cairn but we had no time to examine it. In recent years the loch has been drained by the Forestry Commission, and the surrounding area is planted with young trees. Information from D Colville to Ordnance Survey, 1960. *DL*08/11/2024*Walkover Survey Not visited as previous survey indicated that no cairn is located here. |

| Description             | The following site in Argyll and Bute has been identified and recorded during fieldwork carried out by the staff of West of Scotland Archaeology Service. Full details are available in the West of Scotland Archaeology Service SMR. NR 7680 4128 Allt Buidhe Shieling. WoSAS 1997 *DL *08/11/2024 *Walkover Survey Two sub-circular mounds located immediately within a meander to the east of a burn located within forestry plantation. Both mounds are approximately 4m across and 1-2m in height. Small depressed areas in the centre of the top of each mound indicating the interior. Both largely overgrown, but stone can be felt probing with a ranging rod. |

| Description             | NR 736 494-NR 793 384 In January 1995 a desk-bound assessment was conducted of a 500m wide corridor centred upon the proposed route of an overhead electricity line running between the proposed windfarm at Largie Moor (CFA 1994) and the electricity substation at Carradale. Fifteen sites and monuments were recorded within and adjacent to this corridor. New sites were restricted to post-medieval settlement recorded on Ordnance Survey, earlier map coverage and vertical aerial photographs. NR 780 454 The deserted farmstead of Craigmore is depicted as one roofed and two unroofed buildings and annotated 'Creagmhoir' on the 1st edition of the OS 6-inch map (Argyllshire 1870, sheet CCXXXVI). A detailed report will be lodged with NMRS.Sponsor: EcoGen Limited.A J Dunwell 1995. *DL*12/11/2024*Walkover Survey Within forestry plantation planted since the 1970s/80s. | Description             | NR 736 494-NR 793 384 In January 1995 a desk-bound assessment was conducted of a 500m wide corridor centred upon the proposed route of an overhead electricity line running between the proposed windfarm at Largie Moor (CFA 1994) and the electricity substation at Carradale. Fifteen sites and monuments were recorded within and adjacent to this corridor. New sites were restricted to post-medieval settlement recorded on Ordnance Survey, earlier map coverage and vertical aerial photographs. NR 778 450 The limekiln/deserted farmstead of Breachlarach is depicted as two unroofed buildings with the kiln at the NE end of the larger structure on the 1st edition of the OS 6-inch |

| Description             | NR 736 494-NR 793 384 In January 1995 a desk-based assessment was conducted of a 500m wide corridor centred upon the planned route of an overhead electricity line running between the proposed windfarm at Largie Moor (CFA 1994) and the electricity substation at Carradale. Fifteen sites and monuments were recorded within and adjacent to this corridor. New sites were restricted to post-medieval settlement recorded on Ordnance Survey, earlier map coverage and vertical aerial photographs. NR 7647 4584 The deserted farmstead of Lurgan is depicted as unroofed and annotated 'Lorgie (Ruin)' on the 1st edition of the OS 6-inch map (Argyllshire 1870, sheet CCXXXVI).A detailed report will be lodged with NMRS.Sponsor: EcoGen Limited.A J Dunwell 1995. *DL*08/11/2024*Walkover Survey L-shaped farmstead located at the point where the Carradale Water meets two tributaries, the Drochaid Burn and Allt Chaltuinn. Feature described as a 'ruin' in 1st edition OS maps. Consists of two compartments divided by a wall, one to the west (oriented south-east to north-west - approx 7m x 5m) and the other to the east (oriented south-west to north-east - approx 13m x 5m). Unroofed building constructed of large grey flaggy stones, with some water worn stones used for packing which were presumably sourced from the nearby banks. Fairly well preserved with sections taller than 1.25m. Area heavily overgrown by bracken. |

| Description             | NR 736 494-NR 793 384 In January 1995 a desk-bound assessment was conducted of a 500m wide corridor centred upon the proposed route of an overhead electricity line running between the proposed windfarm at Largie Moor (CFA 1994) and the electricity substation at Carradale. Fifteen sites and monuments were recorded within and adjacent to this corridor. New sites were restricted to post-medieval settlement recorded on Ordnance Survey, earlier map coverage and vertical aerial photographs. NR 787 425 The deserted farmstead of Auchenn is depicted as a roofed building with one roofed, one partially roofed and one unroofed outbuildings on the 1st edition of the OS 6-inch map (Argyllshire 1869, sheet CCXLII) and annotated as 'Auchenrioch'. It is noted in the OS Name Book as 'a good farm house with out offices' (ONB 1868). A detailed report will be lodged with NMRS. Sponsor: EcoGen Limited. A J Dunwell 1995. |

| Description             | NR 736 494-NR 793 384 In January 1995 a desk-bound assessment was conducted of a 500m wide corridor centred upon the proposed route of an overhead electricity line running between the proposed windfarm at Largie Moor (CFA 1994) and the electricity substation at Carradale. Fifteen sites and monuments were recorded within and adjacent to this corridor. New sites were restricted to post-medieval settlement recorded on Ordnance Survey, earlier map coverage and vertical aerial photographs. NR787 425 The deserted farmstead of Kirnashie is depicted as a roofed building on the 1st edition of the OS 6-inch map (Argyllshire 1869, sheet CCXLII). A detailed report will be lodged with NMRS. Sponsor: EcoGen Limited. A J Dunwell 1995. |

| Description             | NR 736 494-NR 793 384 In January 1995 a desk-bound assessment was conducted of a 500m wide corridor centred upon the proposed route of an overhead electricity line running between the proposed windfarm at Largie Moor (CFA 1994) and the electricity substation at Carradale. Fifteen sites and monuments were recorded within and adjacent to this corridor. New sites were restricted to post-medieval settlement recorded on Ordnance Survey, earlier map coverage and vertical aerial photographs. NR 788 387 Rhonadale mill. A detailed report will be lodged with NMRS. Sponsor: EcoGen Limited. A J Dunwell 1995. |

| Description             | Naomi Mitchison and her husband bought the Carradale Estate in 1937 as their Scottish country home. Lady Mitchison lived mainly at Carradale in her later years and following her death the estate was sold and the contents of the house dispersed. The Royal Commission took the opportunity to record the house and its contents after her death. With the help of Mr and Mrs Salins who had looked after Lady Mitchison it was possible to photograph the rooms much as she had occupied them. The house occupies a wonderful position looking due South over its own bay with spectacular views all around. The original house dates from the Mid Eighteenth Century and now forms the northern half of the main house. Its North façade appears to have been the entrance front with an advanced central bay containing the main entrance. Nineteenth Century plans show the remains of a perron stair which may have served the entrance. An Eighteenth Century key-stoned fireplace survives behind a cupboard in the original entrance hall now the TV room. The house appears to have had a hipped roof the present gables and bartisans having been added |

by David Bryce in the Nineteenth Century. The original house seems to have been similar to Saddell House further up the coast.

David Bryce was employed in 1844 to reorder and extend the house. He moved the entrance to the South creating a much more picturesque approach from the Southwest. He added a new Entrance hall leading into a saloon with a new top lit stair hall to the North and a large double aspect Drawing Room to the West. He also created a service stair serving every level of the house and a large new service courtyard to the Northeast. The original Dining Room lost its views to the South during the alterations so Bryce threw an ample bay out to the East catching an unexpected view of the island of Arran. A conservatory was added to the West leading off the Sitting Room sometime in the later Nineteenth Century

In about 1900 a single storey wing was added to the East off the entrance hall providing a cloakroom and a spacious library. This was the extent of the house acquired by the Mitchisons in 1937. They employed Powys and Macgregor of London to raise the floor level of the Victorian kitchen so that it was on the same level as the Dining Room and installed a new central heating system. In 1969 there was a fire that destroyed the service courtyard but thankfully did not effect the main house. The Mitchisons employed William Cadell of Linlithgow to design a new three storeyed service range in 1970. This provided a large modern open plan well lit kitchen adjacent to the Dining Room.

What made Carradale House such a fascinating topic for an in depth photographic survey was the way the Mitchisons used the house and Lady Mitchison's inherently stylish decoration. The exuberant wallpaper in the stair hall was found in London. Antique family furniture, Lady Mitchison was a Trotter of Dreghorn, is mixed with Twentieth Century classics including chairs by Basil Spence and a sideboard by Gordon Russell as well as more utilitarian and rustic pieces.

Artists were invited to stay and their work adorns the walls. Most notable of these was Wyndham Lewis who drew the children and painted a glorious picture of Lady Mitchison which prompted the colour scheme of the Sitting Room where it hung. C E B Brett carried out a series of murals including "Homage A Monsieur Bosch" a version of the garden of earthly delights set in the grounds of Carradale which hangs appropriately in the hall, the principal route to the garden. A leopard prowls in his amusingly littered cage in the saloon fireplace. A dog kennel under the stairs is concealed behind a row of shops including "Mitchison's Bizarre Bazaar and in the Television Room on a large cupboard Carradale House is set in a mythological landscape.

This was primarily a holiday home and it has a relaxed amusing ambience where the precious and the mundane jostle. The David Bryce designed baronial entrance could only be reached on foot everyone used the back door. The library was not as one would expect where she wrote but the home of the ping-pong table. Her main writing table was in the South facing bay window of the Drawing Room but there were a variety of desks and tables throughout the house where she wrote should the muse strike.

The diverse collections have been dispersed and the estate has found enthusiastic new owners. The photographic record carried out the Royal Commission provides a lasting record of this most unusual artistic holiday house on the West Coast of Kintyre.

| Description             | Field Visit (1 June 2008 - 1 February 2010) Cultural Heritage assessment for Cour wind Farm development. The assessment will form part Environmental Statement, due to submitted in 2009. The Cultural Heritage assessment will identify all cultural heritage features within the study area with a field visit, and within 15km of the proposed development, and assess the impact upon these features from the new development. Information from OASIS ID: cfaarcha1-54688 (C Jones) 2010. Field Visit (1 June 2008 - 1 February 2010) Field survey identified the remains of two buildings and a stone bank. A dry-stone rubble built rectangular building with attached enclosure (3a) at NR 78823 46797. The building is 18m by 6m externally with walls 0.7m wide standing to a height of 1.5m . There is no discernible entrance, or any window openings in the upstanding walls, although the wall is partially destroyed on the northwest side. The enclosure is circa 15m by 20m with walls 1m high and is cut through by the burn. The remains of a second building with attached enclosure (3b) at NR 8798 46797. The building is 11m by 4m externally with grassed over stone walls 1m wide and 0.4m high. The enclosure is obscured by dense vegetation, although grass covered banks are visible in places. The enclosure measures circa 15m by 11m (externally) with banks up to 0.4m high. To the northwest of 'Beinnbhreac' at NR 8658 46893 is a turf-covered stone bank (3c) 1m to 1.5m wide and 0.4m to 0.6m high. Information from OASIS ID: cfaarcha1-54688 (C Jones) 2010 Note RCAHMS First Edition Survey Project A farmstead annotated 'Ruin', comprising one unroofed building and one enclosure is depicted on the 1st edition of the OS 6-inch map (Argyllshire 1870, sheet ccxxxvi). One unroofed building and three enclosures are shown on the current edition of the OS 1:10000 map (1991).Information from RCAHMS (AKK) 22 October 1998 |

A walkover survey was then carried out along the proposed route of a power cable between the power station and a new wind farm on Beinn an Tuirc. The watching brief was maintained during August and September 2009 when topsoil and other modern materials were removed from a 62 x 61m area, which was bounded on its E by the existing power station and on its W by the Carradale Water. Previous work along and near the river bank had uncovered evidence of occupation ranging from the Neolithic to the Iron Age. Up to 0.5m of peaty topsoil overlay clay and fine sand, all of which were waterlogged at the time of the investigation, were recorded. The only features were of recent date or of natural origin. The walkover survey, on 16 September 2009, began on the S bank of the Carradale Water, opposite the sub-station, and terminated on the S side of Beinn an Tuirc, a distance of some 5.5km. The remains of nine small, circular structures (probably shieling huts) were found along the bank of an unnamed stream, roughly 1km NE of the summit of Beinn an Tuirc. One line of seven structures, centred on NR 75835 36885, was sandwiched between the burn and a forestry plantation; the second group of two was a short distance away at NR 75839 36803.Archive and Report: RCAHMS and WoSAS SMRFunder: Scottish and Southern Energy plcJohn Lewis – Scotia Archaeology |

during a water supply scheme, on a series of terraces running from the lowest adjacent to Carra Water up to the site of the water reservoir.

Only one potentially significant archaeological feature was discovered: a fire-pit in the line of the access road. The sub-circular pit, measuring 1.3 x 1.2m, had been partially truncated by the insertion of a clay field drain. The pit was 0.15m deep, with a flat base and steep sides. It contained three fills, one rich with charcoal, which along with several thin lenses of red sand (probably heat-scorched) suggest it had been utilised as a fire-pit or hearth. (GUARD 864).

| Description             | A boulder beside the forestry track at the head of Rhonadale Glen has deep man-made scores on its upper surface. Boulder 1.5m high; 1.3m wide; 0.5m deep. Sponsor: Kintyre Antiquarian &amp; Natural History Society. F Hood and D Ritchie 2004 *DL*08/11/2024*Walkover Survey Large moss covered boulder identified at asset location. A small area of moss was removed to inspect the boulder, revealing several vertical and horizontal grooves running across the surface of the revealed area, approximately 2-3cm in width. Some of the grooves are regular however others are irregular, so they do not appear to be anthropogenic (however a more detailed inspection would be required to understand this). |

Watching Brief (August 2009 - October 2009)

An archaeological watching brief at a site where an existing electricity sub-station is to be extended. It also includes the results of a walk-over survey along the route of a new 33kv power cable connecting the sub-station with a new windfarm to be built on the side of Beinn an Tuirc. Both elements of the project were sponsored by Scottish & Southern Energy (SSE) and undertaken by John Lewis of Scotia Archaeology during August and September 2009.

| Description             | Field Visit After many years of studying shielings in the Western Isles and beyond, it has been noticeable how few bothain-àirighe are actually named on maps or documents. The commonest name given by Ordnance Survey is simply "Old Shielings" – although I have yet to find any map detailing any "New Shielings". The few which are named are mostly a personal ownership name, a locality name or a geographic descriptive name. To come across a collection of shielings sharing the enigmatic name of "Àirigh na h-Aon Oidhche" – "The Shieling of One Night" is intriguing to say the least. All the sites found are on Hebridean island locations, except for one site in Kintyre. It seems that the naming of the Àirigh na h-Aon Oidhche sites was primarily by the Seanachie, the Gaelic storytellers and keepers of the community's oral traditions. The tales themselves are generally in the tradition of a morality fable, often involving death of those committing moral 'sins' at the named shielings. It is likely these stories were intended to instruct the younger members of society in the expected behaviours of the times. The main purpose for this research programme was to see if the naming of the sites was directly attributable to the type of structure found at the location. Indeed, it was also desirable to find if there were any structures at the locations, as few were previously accurately | recorded in Canmore Sites records.

This widespread group of shielings was interesting to study as they clearly illustrated the range of vernacular building styles employed across the Hebrides for providing shelters at the shielings, ranging from rock shelters and turf walled constructions to structures on Lewis employing the same standards of building as used more usually in farmhouses.

Kintyre NR 7434 4179 The only references to this site is the name of Glen Arrinahinney appearing on Lewis D Robertson's map of Carradale Estate (1827) and Andrew Henderson's 1857 map of the Lands between Ballochintuy & Machrihanish. There is no recorded folk story associated with this site.

The glen lies between Loch Losgainn and Barr Water in an area now planted with mature Sitka spruce by the Forestry Commission since the early 1970s. The group of turf-walled bothan-àirighe are in a clearing where the confluence of three streams forms the main origin of the Barr Water burn. Access is along the track to the S of the Kintyre Way with the clearing, still devoid of trees, is present on the eastern side of the track. The presence of the site had been noted when the forestry operations began, so the site has not been overplanted, although some of the peripheral trees have fallen in storms and now lie across some of the bothan- àirighe remains.

Jura NR 6523 9196 The Jura site is high on the flanks of Cruach Ionnastail and appears on the Ordnance Survey maps as a locality name, although no building structures are marked. The single isolated bothan-àirighe is on a low mound and is a subcircular stone-built foundation ruin. The surrounding ground is extremely low-grade pasture, even by Hebridean standards. It is saturated peatland with poor tussock grass only between other acidophilic vegetation. There is no specific story associated with the site, although there are several other tales recorded featuring MacPhie as the hero against the Gaelic Otherworld occupants.

Coll NM 2328 5915 The Coll site is at Loch Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche. Other than the name, there is no other reference, either in local stories nor as any built structures. The loch, together with the adjoining Loch Fada forms the main component of the Scottish Water public supply to the main township of Arinagour and much of the Island of Coll. The site can be accessed across an area of upland pasture still used today for both cattle and sheep. This upland strewn with small lochans, many of which have confirmed or likely crannogs across their surfaces. Loch Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche itself has three likely peninsulas which might have previously been crannogs, but the current use of the loch for water supply makes it unlikely that any further investigations would be allowed, for fears of disturbance of silt and contamination of supplies. The bothan-àirighe itself is on the S side of the loch, adjacent to one of the putative crannog sites. A large glacial erratic boulder marks the site. This has been undermined on its western side to form a clamp suitable for cool storage of dairy produce. The bothan is on the opposite side, using the rock as one wall, with the other walls of boulder and turf construction. The floor of the bothan has been excavated down into the ground and the interior today is filled with a tangle of dense vegetation, in particular a large specimen of Salix aurita (eared willow) which fills the interior.

Tiree NL 9767 4560 The main Tiree Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is now overbuilt with a modern house, serendipitously named 'The Airigh', so is no longer accessible for further inspection. However, there is also another associated site, close to the former mediaeval Cornaigmore township: the grazing area known as Faire na h-Aon Oidhch (the One Night's Watch), an area of wet pasture close to Loch Bhasapoll. There is a local tale of a young shepherd spending the night at the former bothan-àirighe but being terrified by flashing lights during his stay, hence he never returned, giving the shieling its name. In later life he retrospectively identified the lights as the Skerryvore lighthouse.

Barra NF 7023 0377 The Barra Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is named in Stahl's report into Barra place-names, where he also gives information regarding its origin – it was the site of reported visits by a local Water Horse who sucked its victims blood in the manner of a vampire and inhabited the nearby Loch an Eich Uisge. There are two adjacent large green, fertile mounds whose surfaces support several bothan-àirighe. There are also some other adjacent bothan immediately to the east of the mounds. The mounds themselves are likely to be much earlier origins, probably Bronze Age structures.

Eriskay NF 8018 1110 The Eriskay Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche is in the hidden Gleann an Fhir Mhòir (translates as the Glen of the Big Man) on the Eastern side of Eriskay. The glen is part of a deep cleft across the island to the east of Beinn Sgriathan, the main hill on the northern end of the island. The waters of the Minch have filled the eastern portion of this geological void creating a fjord like lochan. The steeper portions of the glen have given way in landslides several times in the past leaving many scars and loose ground which can only be traversed with great caution.

There is a small burn, less than 10cm deep, flowing along the base of Gleann an Fhir Mhòir, adjacent to the sub-circular stone bothan-àirighe, which has been deepened, widened and stone lined to give a significant well of sweet water more than half a metre deep. Adjacent to some of the side escarpments of the Glen there are indications of stone settings which may represent ruined storage structures.

South Uist NF 7959 2578 The South Uist Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site was identified by the eponymous loch on Ordnance Survey maps, although no building structures had been recorded at or near the site. A field visit revealed the presence of two large mounds immediately to the north of the loch, both of which had quite different bothain-àirighe structures built onto their surfaces. The southerly mound had two adjoining sub-rectangular bothain, primarily turf walled. However, the northern mound had a much more substantial structure partly excavated into the surface of the mound's crest and lined with large masonry courses standing up to a metre in height.

Benbecula NF 8170 5249 The Benbecula Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is well known. It is a Neolithic Kerb Cairn, known locally as a Barp, which has been remodelled in more recent times to support several bothain-àirighe. There are at least three different iterations of the traditional stories associated with the Benbecula site, involving the untimely deaths of up to 12 people at the hands of Gaelic Otherworld beings.

North Uist NF 8071 6442 On North Uist, the Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche name exists only as a locality name on the Ordnance Survey Explorer maps. The Canmore entry for the name refers to a reported stone circle which was determined to be natural stones by the O.S. surveyor. However, the position of the name on the map is possibly erroneous, as it is to the west of the stream (Allt na Muillne) which drains the nearby Loch nan Struban. This area still bears the recognisable ridges and furrows of earlier agriculture, so it is very unlikely that it would be designated for shieling (summer pasture) usage. However, on the eastern side of the burn, the ground is much more likely to have been pastureland, and there are several areas where the foundations of bothain-àirighe can be readily identified. There are no surviving specific stories relating to the North Uist site

Sursay NF 9578 7584 The tiny island of Sursay is an approximate equilateral triangle with 700 metre sides, less than a kilometre from the shores of North Uist but is politically part of Harris estate and parish. The Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche name has been given to the group of three roofless buildings on the southern shoreline opposite Eilean na Slettich. The name was given following a story concerning a visiting shepherd who was disturbed in the night by screams and rotating lights in the sky which spooked both him and his dog causing him to return immediately to North Uist by rowboat at night and never to return. The ruined buildings appear to be farmstead buildings but may be associated with more extensive farming activities on the nearby island of Taghaigh

Lewis, Uig NB 0197 2852 Uig's Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is marked on the early O.S. mapping as a locality and has two substantial bothain-àirighe structures. The bothain are built in a manner normally seen in farmstead construction, with twin dry-stone walls infilled with dried peat as an insulator and twin stone lintels present over the doorway. The story associated with this site concerns the fears of a girl who was frightened by strange overnight sounds – possibly from wind blowing through rocks in the nearby pass. This locality was a popular site for shieling huts – there are at least a dozen in the immediate area, most of which are of this same 'overengineered' format, many incorporating intra-mural niches and storage cupboards. Although the shielings huts are not together in a tight group, as often found on Uist shieling sites, the huts would be inter-visible, one to two or three others, allowing the township people to remain in close contact.

Lewis, West Side NB 3010 4274 The west side Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is marked by an eponymous Loch, Allt, and Druim (ridge). The bothan-àirighe is at the eastern end of the eponymous ridge about 50 metres from the burn, Allt Loch Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche, which has been widened, and deepened at one point to create a usable well as a sweet water source. This bothan is also of a heavyweight design, similar to that found at Uig, but in the Gleann Bhràgair area it seems that the 'standard' design was to build with the eastern wall in an ellipse, similar to an apse. The design also incorporated multiple intra-mural storage niches and two opposed doorways, sited in the long walls close to the curved 'gable' wall. It is uncertain if the doorways were for practical reasons (always having one downwind) or possible belief ritual (one for entrance, one for exit, for example) Once again, the bothain were not grouped tightly together, but were separated remaining in inter-visual contact only. Sadly, no specific story survives for this site in Gleann Bhràgair.

Lewis, Achmore NB 3155 2660 The Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is part of a wider group of bothain associated with the township of Luerbost (marked as Airighean Luerbost). More than twenty bothain-àirighe are marked on the O.S. Explorer map of the area, but the Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche story associated with this site specifies that the shieling hut was built by a man from Luerbost away from most of the other bothain, near to an un-named loch from which emerged a water horse overnight, causing the man to leave the site lest he be taken to the Otherworld. There is one un-named loch which fits the description well and has an adjacent mound with a shieling hut ruin together with the eroded remains of a turf walled produce clamp. These features are not on any records nor are they shown on the Ordnance Survey maps, although clearly visible on satellite imagery.

Lewis North Lochs NB 3988 1700 Perhaps the most complex story referencing an Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is from this area. This site has an eponymous Loch and Allt which has at some point been partly dammed to regulate the loch's water height. The bothan-àirighe itself is on the northern shore of the loch towards the western end and sheltered from sight with a large rocky promontory and a low dry-stone wall between it and the loch. On the hidden side of this wall there are a group of stones driven into the earth to form a support stand from what might be a cooking pot over a fire. However, a more intriguing solution is that this site was never a shieling at all. The land nearby is VERY poor grazing, and the story is particularly frightening, to deter visitors. Given that some attempt has been made to make the site as hidden as possible, it seems possible that this was in fact the site for a 'poit-dhubh' the traditional illicit still of the Gaeltacht.

Raasay NG 6021 4902 The final Loch Àirighe na h-Aon Oidhche site is on the northern end of Raasay, beyond the end of 'Calum's Road. There is a site described on Canmore which is about half a kilometre from the eponymous loch, but there is the remains of two bothain-airighe and two produce clamps excavated under a large glacial erratic boulder right on the shoreline of the loch. The loch is surprisingly clear sweet water, as it is so high that most of the water it holds is direct run-off from the rocks, not remaining in deep peat previously, hence has little discolouration. There is no specific story from this location, although there are stories of each-mara (water-horses) on the island, one of which was recounted in Johnson's tour of the Hebrides.

| Description | Watching Brief (28 July 2020) NR 7934 3854 A watching brief was undertaken to the N of Carradale Substation, in relation to substation access improvements. The work was carried out on the 28 July 2020 and comprised archaeological monitoring during the creation of a passing place on the B842. No archaeologically significant remains were uncovered. Archive: NRHE (intended) Funder: Cnoclee Environmental Services David Sneddon – Clyde Archaeology (Source: DES Vol 21) Archaeological Evaluation (17 March 2020) NR 7934 3854 An evaluation was undertaken immediately NW of Carradale Substation, prior to the proposed realignment of a watercourse and creation of a hard standing. The evaluation was carried out by Clyde Archaeology on 17 March 2020 and comprised a total of five evaluation trenches totalling 170m<sup>2</sup> which equated to just over 10% of the 1580m<sup>2</sup> site. The evaluation revealed a number of modern field drains and plough scars; however, no archaeologically significant remains were present. Archive: NRHE (intended) Funder: Cnoclee Environmental Services Steven Black – Clyde Archaeology (Source: DES Vol 21) |

| Description             | Artefact Recovery NR 80 37 A complete, cream-coloured flint barbed and tanged arrowhead, Sutton type C, was found by chance on a beach at Carradale, near a stream and mouth of a river. It has a rounded/sub-square tang and short pointed barbs. The arrowhead is quite thick (c7.5mm) with a lenticular profile and section. There is broadly symmetrical working on each face, and retouch along the edges. It dates to the Chalcolithic/Early Bronze Age, c2450–1500 BC. The findspot is close to that of a Neolithic stone axehead (TT 38/06) and, upstream from the beach, prehistoric terraced platforms that were excavated at Achnasavil, producing dates from the Neolithic, Early Bronze Age and Late Bronze Age periods (Carter et al. 1991, Glasgow Archaeological Journal 17, 39–52). Length 39.2mm; width 27.5mm; tang length 13.5mm; barb length c1.2mm; weight 5.34g. Claimed as Treasure Trove (TT 94/19) and allocated to Kilmartin Museum Matthew G Knight and Ella Paul – National Museums Scotland |

Comprised of 4 separate compartments and a entrance area. Square shaped, approx 17m by 17m. Some parts of the sheepfold were built/or rebuilt in concrete, whilst the older sections are made up of drystone walls of a large grey tabular stone. A later concrete shed and lean to is located immediately to the south-west of the sheepfold. |

| Description             | Field Visit (1 June 2008 - 1 February 2010) Cultural Heritage assessment for Cour wind Farm development. The assessment will form part Environmental Statement, due to submitted in 2009. The Cultural Heritage assessment will identify all cultural heritage features within the study area with a field visit, and within 15km of the proposed development, and assess the impact upon these features from the new development. Information from OASIS ID: cfaarcha1-54688 (C Jones) 2010. Field Visit (1 June 2008 - 1 February 2010) The Ordnance Survey 1st Edition (1870) map depicts two buildings with attached enclosures named as 'Gortan an t-Sailleir'. Langland's (1801) and Thomson's (1832) earlier maps depict a farmstead in the same location but name it 'Closeburn'. It is probable that the placenames on these maps are inaccurate. Langlands and Thomson depict 'Closeburn' lying south of 'Gortan' (7), suggesting it is 'Gortan an t-Saillier' but depict a further farmstead to the south of 'Closeburn' naming it as 'Gortantaylor'. This probably corresponds to 'Deargalli' (11). The Ordnance Survey (2001) 1:25,000 Edition map names the site as 'Gortan an t-Sailleir'. Field survey recorded a building and two enclosures relating to the sites depicted on 19th century maps. The building (9a) at NR 81863 47131 is circa 15m by 10m externally, with a small byre attached on the east side. The byre is brick built, with a concrete floor and contains three stalls. The main building is stone built with a concrete harle and a brick fireplace in the eastern wall. A corrugated-iron roof and three brick chimneys survive. The enclosure (9b) at NR 81833 47149, northwest of the building, was barely visible (particularly the northeastern corner) due to thick bracken cover but, where visible, the wall remains appear to be 0.5m high and c.0.6m wide. The second enclosure (9c) at 181911 647284 lies north-northeast of the building remains. The enclosure is 20m by 12m externally with turf-covered stone banks 0.5m high and 0.6m wide. Information from OASIS ID: cfaarcha1-54688 (C Jones) 2010. |

| Description | Field Visit (1 June 2008 - 1 February 2010) Cultural Heritage assessment for Cour wind Farm development. The assessment will form part Environmental Statement, due to submitted in 2009. The Cultural Heritage assessment will identify all cultural heritage features within the study area with a field visit, and within 15km of the proposed development, and assess the impact upon these features from the new development. Information from OASIS ID: cfaarcha1-54688 (C Jones) 2010. Field Visit (1 June 2008 - 1 February 2010) Langland's (1801) and Thomson 's (1832) maps depict a farmstead named as 'Gortantaylor'. The Ordnance Survey 1st Edition (1870) and 2nd Edition (1900) maps depict a building with an attached enclosure and a second enclosure a short way to the southwest. The building is named as 'Deargallt' (11a). Field surveys recorded two sections of field banks, one of which maybe the remnants of an enclosure shown on the Ordnance Survey 1st Edition map. A small section of field bank (11a) at NR 81780 46483, circa. 20m long, 1m wide and 0.5m high, may be the remains of the 'Deargalli' enclosure. The area was covered in dense vegetation at the time of the field visit, restricting thorough survey, and the remains of the building depicted on the Ordnance Survey 1st Edition may still survive. To the north-northeast of the field bank is a section of turf-covered field bank (11b) at NR 8146 46293. The bank runs on a north-northeast to south-southwest alignment and is 0.7m wide and 0.5m to 0.3m high. The bank is obscured by dense vegetation and may survive further than has been surveyed. The Ordnance Survey 1st Edition map (1870) shows the location of small U-shaped enclosure to the southwest of 'Deagalli' enclosure (11a). No upstanding remains of this enclosure were visible during the field survey. Information from OASIS ID: cfaarcha1-54688 (C Jones) 2010. |

| Description | Dun. The remains of this dun occupy the summit of a rocky promontory which rises to a height of 3.5m above level ground to the W, and to 6m above the shore on all other sides. Sub-rectangular on plan, the dun measures about 17m by 13.5m internally. The wall has been completely destroyed by landslips on the N, but elsewhere it is represented by a stony bank 1.0m high and up to 4.5m thick; one short stretch of the inner face is visible in situ on the SSE. The original entrance, which is situated on the SSW and measures 1.2m in width, was cleared during excavations undertaken in 1939 (Fairhurst 1956). The gaps now visible in the wall on the E and W are probably secondary. The only feature in the interior is part of a rectangular building with rounded corners which is probably to be associated with the 16th-century silver coins discovered during the excavation. Other finds made at that time indicate that the history of the site may be similar to that of the dun at Kildonan Bay (NR72NE 5), where occupation probably began in the late 1st or early 2nd century AD and continued, with interruptions, into the medieval period. H Fairhurst 1956; RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960. The dun is as described and planned by RCAHMS (1971). Surveyed at 1:10 000.Visited by OS (JB) 8 November 1977. NR 7851 2851 Site identified as part of a coastal zone assessment survey.M Cressey, S Badger, 2005. |

| Description             | (NR 6547 4984). A second Dun Buidhe lies 100 yds north of the first (NR64NE 6) 'on a rock outcrop about 20 feet high. It stands at the head of a tiny sandy bay which gives good landing facilities at the right state of the tide. The fort is 35 feet away, with very rough ground to traverse from the shore to the fort gate. The interior measures 40 feet by 24.' It is well known as having been a cache for smuggled goods. R S G Anderson 1939. The hillock would seem to be entirely natural. Along the flanks and on the summit there are numerous outcropping rocks and boulders. These boulders appear too large to have any constructional value. Visited by OS (J B) 20 January 1978. |

| Description             | This dun is situated on a low rocky knoll which commands extensive views in all directions. The main wall of the dun, which is drawn round the summit of the knoll to enclose an area measuring 10.5m by 12m, is 3.0m thick, and now consists of a band of core material in which a considerable number of massive facing-stones can be seen. The entrance passage, on the NE, has been about 1.5m in width; its S side is composed of two large slabs measuring 1.4m and 1.2m in length respectively, while the inner corner-stone on the opposite side of the passage is still in position. Round the base of the knoll there has been an outer wall, now represented by a few external facing-stones and a slight scatter of rubble core. A turf dyke, associated with a small turf-walled enclosure, has been erected on the ruins of this outer wall on the SW. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960 A dun as described and planned by RCAHMS.Surveyed at 1:10 000.Visited by OS (NKB) 21 December 1977 |

| Description             | The monument is a group of four well preserved hut circles of the Bronze Age. They lie on a steep W facing slope above the Scaftigill water. Three of the circles (B-D) lie in a N to S line relatively close together on a level shelf. The fourth (A) lies 50m to the NNE, levelled into the hillside. Hut circle A is 9.5m in overall diameter with a bank 1.5m wide and 0.6m high; evidence of internal and external stone facing survives. The entrance, on the SE side, has a small 4.5m wide annexe built onto it. Hut circles B, C and D are very similar to each other in size and layout, having a 9.5m diameter with a bank 1.5m wide and 0.7m high. Once again the banks have | evidence of internal and external stone facing. The entrances are in the SE quadrants. There are no visible traces of contemporary cultivation around or between the hut circles but excavation has shown that scattered remains of activities associated with the occupation of the settlement are likely to survive.

Statement of National Importance

The monument is of national importance because the structural details of the hut circles seem very well preserved. The circles are very good examples of their type. They are of particular interest because of the layout of the settlement; one circle, built with an annexe, is detached from the other three which do not have annexes and lie close together. An opportunity clearly exists on this site to examine the differing functions of buildings and, possibly, differences in social position of groups within the settlement as expressed by differences in the siting of dwellings. The monument is of national importance to the themes of late prehistoric settlement and society. Taken with the hut circles to the S near Auchencar, they are of national importance to the themes of the development and organisation of the prehistoric landscape.

| Description             | The monument is a very well preserved hut circle and associated field system, lying on the N bank of the Auchencar Burn. The hut circle comprises an earth and stone bank spread to 3m in width ad 0.6m high, enclosing a level, featureless area 6.5m in diameter. There is a 1.5m wide entrance in the SE with a single orthostat on the W side. To the N and E lies a wall of boulders enclosing an area c 130m (E-W) by 80m transversely. There are slight traces of subdivision and of field clearance in this area. The monument represents the remains of a small farming unit of the Bronze Age/Iron Age. To protect the visible remains, and a portion of the outfield which would lie beyond the wall, an area measuring 200 E-W by a maximum of 170m N 'S, bounded on the S by the Auchencar Burn, is proposed for scheduling. Statement of National Importance The monument is of national importance because of its excellently preserved field characteristics. It is of particular interest because of the apparent completeness of the field system. It is of national importance to the themes of prehistoric settlement and agriculture. Taken with the hut circles to the N, it is of national importance to the theme of the organisation and development of the prehistoric landscape. References Bibliography RCAHMS records the monument as NR 83 NE 5. |

| Description             | The monument is an isolated hut circle of the Bronze Age. It is built on a levelled platform on a SW facing slope in open moorland. The earth and stone bank is spread to a width of 4m; it is 0.5m and 1.4m high on the uphill and downhill sides respectively. The featureless interior is 8m in diameter. A 1.5m wide gap in the SE is probably the entrance. As there appears to be no associated field system, the area proposed for scheduling includes only the circle and an area around it in which traces of activity associated with the hut will survive. The area is 40m in diameter. Statement of National Importance The monument is of national importance because of its well preserved field characteristics. It is of particular interest because it is built on a levelled platform; this is not common on Arran, and may relate to the Uncensored Platform Settlements of the S mainland of Scotland. The monument is of national importance to the theme of Bronze Age settlement. References Bibliography RCAHMS records the monument as NR 83 NE 6. |

| Description             | The monument consists of the remains of three prehistoric round houses, known as hut circles, situated in open moorland on a west-facing slope. |

Two hut circles (A and B) lie 1000m W of Corputechan Farm, with a third (C) sited 200m further NE and uphill. Hut circle A is extremely well-preserved, with an internal diameter of 8m and a wall surviving to 0.5m high and 1.5m wide. Stone facing slabs are visible along the inside of the wall, and a gap in the SE probably indicates the position of the entrance into the house.

Hut circle B lies approximately 10m to the SE of A, and is represented by a pronounced hollow rather than upstanding banks, as it has been cut into the slope. It is slightly smaller than A, with an internal diameter of 5.5m. Hut circle C is well-preserved, with a diameter of 8.5m, within a wall surviving to 0.3m high and 1.2m wide. Facing slabs are also visible around the circuit of the inner wall, with two large boulders set apart marking the doorway to the S.

The area to be scheduled is in two parts, one an oval 70m NNW-SSE by 50m, and the other a circle 50m in diameter centred on the centre of hut circle C, to include the three hut circles and an area around them in which evidence relating to their construction and use may survive, as marked in red on the accompanying map extract.

Statement of National Importance

This monument is of national importance because it has the potential considerably to increase our understanding of later prehistoric domestic life and settlement architecture. Hut circles are relatively rare on mainland Argyll, and this is the first such site to be scheduled in Kintyre. The proximity of the hut circles to the (probably) later dun (scheduled ' SAM 3178), less than 100m to the NNE is also of considerable interest, suggesting a multi-period aspect to this landscape.

| Description             | The monument comprises a Bronze Age kerbed cairn (sometimes also described as a stone circle) which is situated on a slight W-facing terrace overlooking the N end of Machrie Bay. The round cairn measures 14.5m in diameter from NW to SE by 13m transversely and is surrounded by 15 earthfast sandstone blocks which measure from 0.5m to 2.3m in height. It is not clear how much of the internal cairn has been either robbed or is the product of field clearance. However, there is a record of an undated excavation (probably in the late nineteenth century) which found a cist in the centre of the cairn, but nothing further is known about this. The area to be scheduled is almost circular on plan and measures up to 50m in diameter, to include the cairn and an area around in which associated remains may survive, as marked in red on the attached map extract. |

Statement of National Importance

The monument is of national importance because it has well defined field characteristics and, despite earlier investigations, has the potential to provide information about Bronze Age ritual and funerary practice. It is also situated on the NW edge of a renowned, dense concentration of similar and related Neolithic and Bronze Age monuments around Machrie Water (both domestic and ritual) which have great potential to enhance our understanding of the development of prehistoric society.

| Description             | OS 6" map, Argyllshire, 2nd ed., (1924) |

A well-preserved dun, crowning a rocky knoll and measuring 19.2m by 13.1m within a wall 1.5m to 4.3m thick, composed of a rubble core faced with boulders, and having an internal revetment. For a distance of 5.5m south of the entrance in the SW, this revetment is replaced by a narrow, curving gallery open at both ends. The inner face of the wall is set at a higher level than the outer and on the north stands to its original height of a little over 2.1m, but elsewhere is only about 1.2m high. The outer face exhibits a marked batter and is now 2.4m in maximum height but it may originally have been 3.7m high at the entrance, and as much as 4.6m in places along the east side. The entrance, 1.65m to 2.59m wide is paved and provided with door-checks and bar-holes.

From the interior of the dun a short passage on the NE leads to a mural cell which has lost its corbelled roof; and another opening on the west gives access to twin staircases built against the internal revetment. Excavations between 1936 and 1938 indicated that there had been several occupations and modern excavations at comparable sites indicate a primary occupation in the late first or early second centuries AD. Kerbed hearths and what were thought to be the foundations of small huts were associated with this period and among the finds was a single, small sherd of samian. A 9th century bronze penannular brooch indicated Dark Age occupation and the site was again re-occupied between the late 12th and early 14th centuries. In final phase, which cannot be dated, the interior of the dun appears to have been adapted for use as a stock enclosure.

H Fairhurst 1939; RCAHMS 1971, visited 1960.

The dun is as described and illustrated by the previous authorities.

Surveyed at 1:10 000.

Visited by OS (JB) 8 November 1977.

Sounding below Fairhurst's Period II Hearth 2 (vide PSAS 1939) in order to recover assays for C14 dating yielded quantities of charcoal, part of an iron knife, a mica schist disc, two socketed stones (mortars) and a paved area attributable to the first phase of occupation.

E Peltenburg and F Hood 1979.

NR 7806 2778 Site identified as part of a coastal zone assessment survey.

| Description             | The monument comprises two prehistoric standing stones, one now fallen. The standing stones likely date from the late Neolithic or Bronze Age periods (between 3800 and 2500 BC). The erect stone is around 5m high, 0.3m thick and 1.8m wide. The fallen stone, lying adjacent and now broken into three pieces, measures around 5m long in total and 1.5m wide. The stones are located on a flat, agricultural, coastal plain around 400m from the coastline. The scheduled area is circular, measuring 15m in diameter. It includes the remains described above and an area around within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment is expected to survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. Statement of National Importance The national importance of the monument is demonstrated in the following way(s) (see Designations Policy and Selection Guidance, Annex 1, para 17): a. The monument is of national importance because it makes a significant contribution to our understanding or appreciation of the past. Standing stones are one of the main sources of evidence for the Neolithic in Scotland and so are important in our understanding of the nature of Scotland's prehistoric society and landscape. The example contributes to our understanding of the design, construction and siting of prehistoric ritual monuments in the Neolithic period. b. The monument retains structural, architectural, decorative or other physical attributes which make a significant contribution to our understanding or appreciation of the past. In particular, the standing stones retain impressive field characteristics due to their scale. There is also potential for the survival of buried archaeological deposits which can contribute to our understanding of the meaning and importance of ritual in the Neolithic period. c. The monument is a rare example of standing stones of a massive scale: it is uncommon for such monuments to stand to this height. |

d. The monument is a particularly good example of a pair of standing stones and is therefore an important representative of this monument type. It can enhance our understanding of Neolithic society and economy, as well as the nature of burial and ceremonial practices and belief systems.

e. The monument has research potential which could significantly contribute to our understanding or appreciation of the past. The form of the monument can be researched, contrasted and compared with other monuments of this type. The remains of the monument have the potential to provide material for carbon dating which when compared with similar monuments could contribute to a better understanding of the chronological development of standing stone construction during this period of Scottish prehistory. Additionally, there is the potential for environmental material to survive around the base of the standing stones which could provide information on demographics, land use and environment.

f. The monument makes a significant contribution to our understanding of the prehistoric landscape of Arran; it is located to the north west of the rich prehistoric landscape of Machrie Moor. Standing stones are found in a variety of locations in the west of Scotland, and the siting of these ritual monuments can give important insights into the Neolithic landscape and add to our understanding of social organisation.

Assessment of Cultural Significance

This statement of national importance has been informed by the following assessment of cultural significance:

Intrinsic characteristics (how the remains of a site or place contribute to our knowledge of the past)

The standing stones are of a notable size. The scale of the standing example is impressive and among the tallest in the west of Scotland. The fallen stone is likely to be situated on the spot, or at least within very close proximity to, where it originally stood. It is probable that it broke into three pieces when it fell to the ground.

There is likely to have been Neolithic Age activity in the vicinity of the standing stones. Examples of standing stones that have undergone detailed scientific analysis provide evidence for ritual and ceremonial activities taking place around the stone, this monument has the potential to yield such information. Therefore, archaeology related to use and activities around the fallen stone is also likely to survive.

In some excavated examples, such as at Carlinwell, Angus (scheduled monument reference SM4315, Canmore ID 32362) inhumations or cremation burials have been found placed around standing stones and this includes skeletal material as well as urns and grave goods. Surviving environmental remains can help us understand more about the vegetation cover and land use at the time of its erection and then use.

Contextual characteristics (how a site or place relates to its surroundings and/or to our existing knowledge of the past)

Standing stones are a widespread class of monument across Scotland. This example sits within a level coastal plain, with hills behind and a view across to the sea, some 400m distant. There are four other recorded standing stones or stone circles within 4km of this example. The closest example is approximately 2.5km southeast of the monument - Machrie Farm, standing stone 1100m NE of (Scheduled Monument reference SM4430 and Canmore ID reference 39759). Other broadly contemporary, and possibly related, monuments in the area include burial cairns. A nearby example, only 3km south-southeast of this monument is Tormore, long cairn 875m SSE of Crochandoon (scheduled monument reference SM407 and Canmore ID reference 39779). The area of Machrie Moor is around 4km southeast and is the location of a concentration of prehistoric ritual and burial sites. There are other examples of standing stones in that area and some are of similar scale to these examples.

The position of these standing stones may have been deliberately chosen to take advantage of routeways, views and intervisibility with other monuments. There is potential to study this monument and its relationship to other prehistoric monuments in the landscape.

Associative characteristics (how a site or place relates to people, events, and/or historic and social movements)

There are currently no known associative characteristics that contribute to the national importance of the monument.

| Description | (NR 7188 4471) McInnes (1935) notes a Bronze Age gold bracelet, now lost, from Braids (NR 718 447), Killean. Colville says it was penannular, was cast up by a rabbit, and was found by a shepherd named Robertson at NR 7188 4471.RCAHMS 1971; L McInnes 1971; Information from D Colville to OS, 1953. Coles (1962), quoting Miss Campbell (Kilberry Castle, Kilberry), notes two Late Bronze Age Irish gold armlets and an associated grave at Killean. The armlets could be the bracelets noted by McInnes (supra), one found at Killean House (NR64SE 3) and the other at Braids, but with which the grave is associated is not clear.J M Coles 1962. No further information.Visited by OS (N K B) 15 March 1978. |

|                         | (NR 7066 4449) A cup and ring marked stone lies just under 1.2 km NE of Drumnamucklach, and 90m S of the gorge of the Killeean Burn. Measuring 2.4m by 1.5m and 0.6m in height, it lies in open moorland a few metres S of a rough track leading out to the hill from a gate in a stone wall 175m to the NW. Scattered over its level upper surface there are forty-two well-marked cups ranging from 0.025m to 0.076m in diameter and up to 0.013 m in depth. Five of the cups have a single surrounding ring (the largest measuring 0.25m in diameter) and in two instances a radial groove leads from the cup to the ring but not beyond. On the S portion of the stone two ringed cups are linked by connecting grooves, one of which incorporates two cups. Roughly in the centre of the stone a pair of cups are joined together by a thin channel to form an elongated dumb-bell figure.RCAHMS 1971, visited 1961; R W B Morris 1977. |

Description WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance

This is a hut circle situated on level moorland. It measures 8.5m in diameter within a wall faced internally with slabs on edge, which are visible intermittently around the whole periphery. Two of these slabs in the south arc, 0.55m apart, appear to be inner portal stones; here the wall is about 1.2m thick. There is no trace of an associated field system, but lazy-beds occur adjacent to the hut.

Surveyed at 1:10,000.

Description WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance

These are stone-walled hut circles situated on a dry rise in open moorland.

A, the better-preserved, is 8.0m in diameter within a wall spread to 1.5m broad; intermittent slabs on edge remain of the inner wall face A gap in the south-east arc denotes the entrance.

B is set into the slope and measures 5.5 m within a wall spread to 1.5 m broad; the entrance is in the south east.

The ground around the huts is smooth and the heather is close-cropped, which may indicate associated land cultivation but no plots, lynchets or clearance heaps can be identified.

Surveyed at 1:10,000.

| Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance (NR 6961 4026) A cup-marked stone is situated 185m SE of Low Clachaig and 9m N of the fence that encloses a County Council water-tank; it measures 1.4m by 1.1m and 0.5m in height. During the construction of the tank it was dislodged and overturned so that the markings, which were originally on its upper surface, are no longer visible. But four plain cups were seen in 1938 (information from MS by Mrs MacAlister Hall, 'Kintyre Collections', 224/10). RCAHMS 1971, visited 1961. This cup-marked stone is as described by the RCAHMS; it is still overturned.Surveyed at 1:2500.Visited by OS (J B) 6 December 1977. |

| Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance(NR 6990 4404) A cup and ring marked stone is situated a little over 275m ENE of Drumnamucklach and 14m S of the stone wall that runs eastwards uphill from the S side of the policies of Killean House. Now leaning against another stone, from which it appears to have been broken, it measures 1.5m by 1.0m, the upper surface sloping to the W. It bears two ringed cups, one with a single complete oval ring and part of a second, the other with one incomplete ring to which there is attached a shallow curving groove incorporating three plain cups, while a fourth cup abuts on the ring itself. Elsewhere there are at least four plain cups. The markings are up to 0.013m deep.RCAHMS 1971, visited 1961; R W B Morris 1977.The cup-and-ring-marked stone is as described and illustrated by the previous authorities.Surveyed at 1:2500Visited by OS (J B) 13 December 1977. |

| Description | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance At NR 7060 3687 set into a southerly slope is a stone-walled hut circle about 8.0m internal diameter. The build-up of peat has enveloped the south-east arc, but in the north-west the wall is spread to about 2.5m wide and stands to 0.2m high. There is no trace of the entrance, which was presumably in the south or south-east. Surveyed at 1:10,000. Visited by OS (NKB) 30 January 1978. Archaeological desk-based assessment and field inspection were undertaken in March 1996 within the area of a proposed plantation W of Loch Arnicle. Evidence for pre-recent settlement had previously been identified by the Strathclyde Joint Archaeology Service. The current survey identified additional unrecorded sites related to prehistoric, medieval and post-medieval land and livestock management practices. The following site is monuments are amongst those recorded during the evaluation (NMRS reference numbers in brackets): NR 7060 3687 Hut circle Full details will be lodged with the NMRS. Sponsor: Scottish Woodlands Ltd. M Cressey 1996 Site identified during an archaeological desk-based assessment and field inspection undertaken in March 1996 within the area of a proposed plantation W of Loch Arnicle: NR 7061 3688: Hut Circle Description: The hut-circle is recorded in the NMRS and is located on a southerly slope. This feature is visible on the 1946 aerial photograph. Peat initiation has obscured the south-east arc of the structure which was seen to have an internal diameter of 8m. The north-west wall is spread to about 2.5m wide and stands to about 0.2m high. The NMRS also states that there was no trace of the entrance, which was presumed to be in the south or south-east. Field inspection confirmed that the structure is 11-12m in external diameter with an entrance 2m wide to the south. In places the walls stand to a height of 0.3-0.5m. Approximately 60m to the north-west is another less well defined circular sedge-filled depression of a similar dimension to the hut-circle described above (16). Cressey, M., CFA Archaeology Ltd, 'Loch Arnicle Woodland Grant Scheme, Kintyre, Argyll &amp; Bute: Archaeological Survey', (1996) Entered WoSAS (MO'H), 30/03/10 |

| Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance At NR 702 399, on a gentle moorland slope about 170m OD, are two hut circles (A and B). The more westerly (A) is 6.5m in diameter within a boulder-faced wall 1.1m wide. The wall has been robbed to construct a crude shelter or lambing pen next to the entrance in the SSE are where a side slab is preserved. Hut 'B' is oval 5.5m N-S by 5.0m E-W within a wall 1.1m thick in which several inner facing stones are visible. The entrance, greatly obscured, is in the south arc. Outside the hut is an oval formation of large stones which appear to connect with the hut wall. This is possibly the remains of an earlier hut. There is no evidence of associated cultivation. Surveyed at 1:10,000. Visited by OS (NKB) 14 February 1978. |

| Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance (NR 7068 3699) (information from RCAHMS 6" map). A cup-marked stone lies in open moorland 110m south of the long head-dyke and 685m east of its intersection with the Allt a' Mhuilinn. Measuring 1.7m by 1.4m and projecting 0.6m above ground, it bears on its upper surface 25 plain cups, most of them shallow and worn. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1962. The cup-marked boulder as described by RCAHMS (1971) is located at NR 7065 3696. Colville (1953) is presumably referring to this boulder, as it is the most prominent of four other cup-marked stones in the vicinity. (See NR73NW 14, 15, 18.) Surveyed at 1:10,000. Visited by OS (NKB) 30 January 1978. Site identified during an archaeological desk-based assessment and field inspection undertaken in March 1996 within the area of a proposed plantation W of Loch Arnicle: NR 7066 3697: Cup Marked StoneDescription: The NMRS records a cup marked stone lying in open moorland 110m south of the long head-dyke and 685m east of its intersection with the Allt a' Mhuilinn burn. The current OS 1:10,000 map also depicts 'Cup-marked rocks' at this location. The stone was seen to measure 1.7m by 1.4m and to project 0.6m above ground. It bears on its upper surface 25 plain cups, most of them shallow and worn. This stone was not located during the course of this field survey, and was not visible on the 1946 and 1947 aerial photographs. | Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance Old Largie Castle (Site). When the officers of the Ordnance Survey visited this site about the year 1868 they reported that "only a small portion of the side wall" of the castle survived, and that the remainder of the area was occupied by the farmsteading of High Rhunahaorine. This farmsteading, apparently a structure of late 18th- or early 19th century date, has since become completely ruinous and its fragmentary remains now incorporate no recognisable portions of an early castle. The MacDonalds of Largie, descendants of the MacDonald Lords of the Isles, have been in possession of estates in Kintyre since about the middle of the 15th century. The site now under discussion was presumably an early seat of the family in this locality, but since at least as early as the end of the 18th century the principal family residence has been situated at Tayinloan. Old Largie Castle is said to have been "merely a fortified house, strong but plain in character, and of small size (Bede 1861).RCAHMS 1971, visited 1965; Name Book 1869; C Bede 1861. Within the ruins of the farmstead there are two features remaining probably from the old castle. They are a cellar in the SW end of the farmstead, of which no structural details remain |

due to choking by debris, and short stretches of broken walling up to 2.2m high on the N and E sides of the farm which would appear to be the remains of the original barmkin.
Visited by OS (J B) 16 December 1977.

During the course of a watching brief conducted on the installation of an earth wire to an overhead power line, the opportunity was taken for a brief investigation of Old Largie Castle and the remains of the farmstead that reportedly overlies it. The only buildings of which anything now stands consist of two adjoining structures in the south-west corner of the site.

The westernmost of these buildings survives as a cellar, now almost completely infilled with rubble and overgrown with hawthorn trees. It measures 7.8m east/west by 6m wide overall with mortar-bonded walls of random rubble standing up to 2m high.

Abutting the east side of this building is another structure which measures 7.3m east/west by 6m wide. Clearly these two structures formed at least part of a single range of buildings which, on the evidence of the cellarage in one of them, was probably an element of Old Largie Castle. It might be reasonable to suggest that this short range continued to be occupied when the castle was replaced by the post-medieval farm.

The principal seat of the MacDonalds of Old Largie is believed to have been transferred to Tayinloan in the late 18th century (RCAHMS 1971, 160), around the time that High Rhunahaorine farm came into being. It might be that this process was simply a renaming exercise, perhaps with the ownership of the castle being passed to a junior member of the family.

The only other standing structure thought to be contemporary with the late medieval castle consists of the remains of what is believed to be a barmkin wall on the east side of the site. It is built of mortar-bonded rubble and now stands to a maximum height of 2.4m. There is a return at the north end of this wall although its south end peters out as the ground slopes down towards a small stream.

The drystone foundations of another wall abut the putative east barmkin wall, roughly midway along its surviving length, perhaps indicating the limit of a later farm enclosure measuring approximately 30m east/west by 22m wide.

On the evidence of the structures still standing, it is impossible to tell what Old Largie Castle originally comprised. Although the barmkin appears to have been quite large, the only structures now visible within it are the two relatively small buildings at its south-west corner. It seems unlikely that the cellared building, clearly the earliest of those two structures, was the castle's principal dwelling and it must be wondered whether a more imposing tower was completely demolished when the castle was abandoned, leaving no trace above ground.

Other than the drystone wall that divides the original barmkin, there is little that can be ascribed with confidence to the post-medieval farmstead although the first edition Ordnance Survey map, published in 1882, shows the ruins that are still visible as well as a range to its north-east of which nothing was noted at the time of the watching brief.

Clearly, until the hawthorn trees and other vegetation that cover the area are removed it will be difficult to undertake a detailed survey of the site. Even then, little more might be revealed beyond what is already evident.

(NR 7176 4440) Cup and ring markings occur on a large flat boulder at a height of 170m OD in rough pasture 365m S of Braids farmhouse. Measuring 2.7m by 1.4m and protruding 0.3m above ground, the boulder lies 135m NNE of the junction of two small nameless tributaries of the Killean Burn; its level upper surface bears an unusual combination of designs including cup-and-ring markings, plain cups and rayed circles. Near the NW corner of the stone there is a cup surrounded by two rings, measuring 0.09m and 0.15m in diameter respectively, to the outer of which there is attached a small cup and gutter enclosed within an elongated horse shoe-figure. Close beside it is a second double-ringed symbol in which a radial groove runs from a central cup across the inner ring (0.10m in diameter) to end a short distance beyond a gap in the outer ring (0.17m in diameter). Elsewhere there are at least four other cups, each accompanied by a complete or partial ring (0.076 to 0.10m in diameter) together with twenty-two plain cups ranging from 0.025m to 0.070m in diameter, the larger examples being up to 0.025m deep. The most unusual symbols, however, are the two rayed circles, which are rare within the varied repertoire of cup-and ring designs. The larger example, near the S end of the stone, consists of a small central cup from which six evenly-spaced grooves radiate to a surrounding ring (0.15m in diameter), thus forming a wheel-like figure. The smaller example, situated among a group of plain cups in the NE quarter of the stone, consists of a small cup with six radial grooves, but no surrounding ring, forming a design resembling an asterisk. RCAHMS 1971; Information from D Colville to OS, 1953.

The 'wheel' and the 'asterisk' had weathered away by 1974.
R W B Morris 1977.

The cup-marked boulder noted above is as described and illustrated by RCAHMS. The 'wheel' is still clearly visible, but the 'asterisk' is very obscure.
About 23.0 metres to the north there is an uneven block approximately 1.4m by 1.0m by 0.7m high. On the southerly inclined face is a well-formed hollow, almost certainly a cup-mark. On the opposite face there is a weathered, elongated oval depression. It is probably a 'dumb-bell' mark, but it is not as clearly defined as the cup mark. Surveyed at 1:10,000.
Visited by OS (J B) 16 February 1978.

Located under bracken, this large boulder is generally as described in the previous reports, although the rock art features have suffered some erosion since their initial discovery. The rare wheel-type design in particular is difficult to see

| Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance At NR 7168 4447 is a rock outcrop 4.5m by 3.0m and standing 0.9m high on the S side. On the S side of the near level upper surface are at least twelve cup marks, four examples of which are unusually large, maximum size 0.14m in diameter and 0.07m deep. Surveyed at 1:10,000. Visited by OS (J B) 15 March 1978. This cup-marked bedrock outcrop is located on the NW side of a stream course and is generally covered in bracken around its base. The markings are as described in previous reports, although many are obscured by thick lichens and patches of vegetation growing out of the numerous cracks which run across the outcrop. However, the large and quite unusual deep cups could be clearly seen Birch, S., West Coast Archaeological Services, 'Braids Woodland Creation Scheme - Killean Estate, Kintyre Peninsula: Archaeological Desk Based Assessment and Walkover Survey', 2018 |

| Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance (NR 7018 4439) A cup and ring marked stone is situated about 685m NE of Drumnamucklach. It lies beside a small stream, a short distance N of the junction of two stone walls, and measures 3.0m by 1.8m and 0.5m in height; its upper surface slopes down towards the NE. The markings which are up to 0.019m in depth, are confined to the E part of the stone as the W part is very uneven. They comprise ringed cups, plain cups and a very unusual combination of two pairs of elongated channels running at right angles to each other and forming a rough grid-pattern across the stone. Two of the cups have a single ring with an incomplete second ring, three cups have one complete ring, and a further six cups have an incomplete single ring. In one instance a group of three cups is enclosed within an oval channel which merges with one of the long transverse gutters already mentioned. In addition there are eight plain cups. | Description             | WoSAS C - Almost Certainly of National Importance (NR 7016 4413) A cup-marked stone measuring 2.4m by 2.1m lies 550 ENE of Drumnamucklach; it is 80m SE of a long head-dyke and almost in line with the centre of three cross-walls that run downhill from the dyke of the policies of Killeean House. Its flat upper surface appears at one time to have been almost covered with plain cups, but owing to weathering they are now so indistinct that only about a dozen can be identified with certainty, |

NR 8876 3695 An enclosure, visible on RAF air photographs 58/980 3027-28 (flown 1952), is situated at 100ft OD on the level top of a steep-sided west facing spur (which is part of the former coastal slope).

A length of ruined stone wall and two parallel silted-up ditches isolate a level occupation area approximately 40.0m long by up to 25.0m wide. The wall is now a rubble spread crossing the spur; it is about 23.0m long, 2.5m wide and 0.2m high with a distinct gap near its east end probably indicating an entrance.

It is not certain if this wall ever encircled the promontory. At 8.0m and 22.0m to the north-east lie the cross-ridge ditches which are up to 4.0m wide and 1.0m and 0.6m deep respectively; there are vestiges of a causeway near the centres of the ditches. There is evidence of a bank or rampart between the ditches but it has been too badly denuded to positively identify.

A substantial trench approximately 15.0m by 8.0m and 1.4m deep, has been excavated in the interior with only a nominal spoil heap; its origin and purpose is completely obscure but it would appear to be the result of recent quarrying.
The general appearance and position of the enclosure suggests that it was a small fort or defended settlement.

Surveyed at 1:10,000.

The shielings are of the usual earthen construction, and are circular or oval, on average 2.0m across. Most examples occupy mounds. Superficially the enclosures resemble hut circles being 4.0m to 5.0m internal diameter within heather-covered banks spread to 1.5m broad, but they lack the circularity of plan-form, and |

The site occurs within a new forestry plantation, but it has been left clear of ploughing and planting.

| Description             | WoSAS V - Probably of National Importance |

A small pile of stones whose name, meaning 'Roderick's Cairn' is well-known. It has evidently been a cairn of some size to judge by the surrounding ground. Tradition says it was used for the guidance of vessels into the 'Fhang'.
Name Book 1869.

A cairn with peristalith, measuring about 25 feet across and having a small modern cairn on top.
OS 6" map annotated by C M Piggott, September 1948.

(NR 6637 4996). The cairn is 7.5m in diameter and about 1.0m high, covered by heather and bracken. Although the kerb is generally ill-defined it is relatively well-preserved in the SE quarter. Stones have probably been added to the summit at a later date.

| Description | WoSAS V - Probably of National Importance NR 6478 4780. The last vestiges of a dun can be seen on the top of an isolated knoll. It was probably oval on plan, measuring about 13.5m by 9m internally, but the remains of the wall can now be traced only round the N half of the circuit, appearing as a very low stone bank about 3m thick. A short stretch of the outer face survives on the W side, about one metre below the crest of the knoll. The entrance may have been on the SE.RCAHMS 1971. The dun is as described and planned by RCAHMS.Surveyed at 1:10,000.Visited by OS (J B) 17 January 1978. NR 647 478. Unchanged from description in Inventory except that the hill would appear to have been artificially shaped round the sides and levelled on the top.Visited April 1993.Island of Gigha Archaeological Field Survey.Site report in SMR archive.Hood 1994. |

The information provided by Colville is too scant to allow correlation with the stones noted above.

Possibly this is the site listed by Naddair and MacLardy as Drumnamucklach (6): 'Approximately 11 solo cups'.

NR 717 444. An enclosure lies 40m SW of NR74SW 2. It measures 7.5m in diameter within a turf-covered wall 1.5m to 2m thick. The entrance is in the SE and 4m SW of the enclosure, a turf-covered dyke, 16.5m long, runs NW-SE.

NR 7173 4435. Sheep Stell.

Information from RCAHMS 6" map.

This feature lying among run-rig at NR 7174 4436 is almost certainly a hut circle. It is generally as described by Authy 1 measuring about 9.0m in diameter within a wall 2.5m maximum spread and 0.5m in average height. The "dyke" to the SW is covered by peat and turf, suggesting a considerable age, but whether it is contemporary with the hut or connected with the run-rig cannot be determined.

Surveyed at 1:10,000.

Visited by OS (J B) 17 February 1978.

This structure is completely obscured by dense bracken stands, although the vegetation growing off the wall-heads highlights its location. The site is as described in previous reports, with banks up to 0.7m high and with an entrance located in the SE section of the bank. There are some large stones embedded in the ground around parts of the base of the bank, but especially on the NW arc

| Description             | WoSAS V - Probably of National Importance |

At NR 7127 4167 on a gentle south facing slope is an enclosure of some age that may be a homestead. The structure is levelled slightly into the slope and is rectangular in plan with the south angles rounded, and with the north side faintly bowed out. It measures internally 8.9m, N-S, by 5.3m conversely. The peat-covered wall, standing to 0.5m and a little over 1.0m in width, seems to be coursed and interspaced with small boulder-slab facings at base. It is divided into two equal compartments with a step in the floor level to the northern compartment. The entrance was probably in the south wall. There is rig-and-furrow in the vicinity which is probably associated with the abandoned farm Achaglass 450.0m to the SW.

There are comparable features between this site and one example close to the Armadale Burn in north Sutherland (See NC76SE 7).

Both buildings seem to have been dry-built, and as far as can now be judged, the walls were of faced stone, with rubble infill. There are a few gravestones, without archaeological interest.J A Balfour 1910.The published site lies in an old burial ground which is bounded by a coastal cliff on the east and south sides and drystone walling on the other sides. legible inscriptions) and a quantity of loose stone over the area but no structural remains could be identified in the dense undergrowth.

The two buildings "close to the road" are not shown on the OS 25" (county series map) nor is there any evidence of them on the ground. They are clearly different structures to the one noted in 1856.

Centred NR 8963 3807. A very well-preserved group of at least nine shieling bothies were found during field investigation situated on the floodplain of a tributary of Iorsa Water. The largest structure lay to the south of the main group and now comprises a turf-covered mound 10.0m by 8.0m and 0.8m high. Most of the collapsed bothies are now 4.5m diameter and 0.5m high turf-covered mounds. Surveyed at 1:10,000. Visited by OS (MJF) 9 December 1977.

(NR 811 401) A Platform lies along the beach about 1 mile north of Carradale. It is more like a hut circle than the two similar platforms to the south (see NR83NW 4). It is 30m beyond the point where the Forestry Commission path leaves the shore and turns west to climb up the cliff. It is behind a rock stack and in a very sheltered position. Information contained in letter from Miss E B Rennie 30 May 1977.

This platform lies at NR 8112 4052 in the position described above. It is similar to the two examples close by to the south (see NR83NW 4) but does not have such a high frontal arc of walling. It is clearly scooped into the slope and measures 8.2m in overall diameter with a maximum height of 0.4m in the east where fragmentary walling is visible. No entrance can be seen. The date and purpose of the platform are uncertain.

Surveyed at 1:10,000.

| Description | Although this stone-built byre lies outside the proposed woodland creation scheme, it forms the boundary of the Braids exclusion area, along with a stone dyke. The building is relatively well-preserved and has walls up to 0.6m wide and standing between 2.0m, and 3.5m at the gables. The building has a stone-slab-lined drain running down its length in the floor.Birch, S., West Coast Archaeological Services, 'Braids Woodland Creation Scheme - Killean Estate, Kintyre Peninsula: Archaeological Desk Based Assessment and Walkover Survey', 2018. |

| Description             | Late 12th-century parish church of St John.(1) Slab, now in Campbeltown Museum; 0.51m by 0.33m, trimmed at top and one side. Face (a) bears in false relief a Latin cross between four crosslets with pellets in the angles. On face (b) is a similar cross. The lower margin has been rebated to fit a socket-stone, perhaps on a free-standing 'altar' or leacht.I Fisher 2001. |

| Description             | This possible burial cairn consists of two or three largish stones in the centre with some outliers and is situated wet ground on the west side of Carradale-Campbeltown road - no distance away but hidden in a dip. Work has just begun to level an area to the south for 5 new houses, and while the current works do not appear likely to directly affect the cairn, its presence should be recorded so that it is taken into consideration should any further development be proposed. The grid reference is NR797 369 and on Pathfinder map 453 the letter P of 'Platforms' is just about where the cairn is. A large number of platforms were identified on Dippen Hill; one of which was lost to road widening some years ago and more may be lost to the housing. The eroded and nearly invisible turf edged platforms were examined some years ago and yielded nothing in the way of finds. Siggins, G., Report to SMR, 30/06/08Entered WoSAS (MO'H) 30/06/2008 |

| Description             | A large flat slab identified at this location may be a cist. Located in a flat strip between the modern B842 and the shore, one end of the slab rests on another stone, while sounding with a stick produces an is obvious resonance suggesting there is a box or hollow below. Feature identified around 10m east of the B842, in a strip of ground between the road and the shore. The ground in this area is boggy and waterlogged due to the presence of a band of slightly higher exposed bedrock on the coast, with many pools of standing water visible. The feature sits at a slight angle to the road, with the north-east end further from the road edge than the south-west; however, the long axis of the slab is nevertheless aligned broadly NE-SW.

On initial inspection, the feature appeared to comprise a large and generally flat slab measuring around 1.6m NE-SW by around 0.9m at its widest point. At its NE end, this slab appeared to be resting on a second stone that extended a further 0.5m beyond the end of the main slab. However, cleaning at the intersection between these two elements indicates that they were in fact part of the same stone. Removing vegetation and soil from around the SW end of the main visible slab exposed a similar lower stepped portion extending for a further 0.4m, meaning that the total length of the slab was around 2.5m.

Small trial holes were excavated down each side of the long axis of the stone to determine its depth; these revealed the slab to be around 0.4m thick. There was no obvious indication of side slabs, and while there did appear to be a small gap or space below the slab, this was very narrow, with a base that appeared to be composed of soft mud. Combined with the overall dimensions and the fact that it did appear to comprise a single stone rather than being a flat slab resting on a second stone, as it had initially appeared, this would seem to suggest that it is not a cist.

| Description             | Context: An archaeological desk based assessment and walkover survey was carried out in advance of a woodland creation scheme at the head of the Killean Glen. Results: The desk based assessment recovered 15 archaeological sites including post-medieval farmsteads, lime kilns and their associated infrastructure, a prehistoric hut circle and prehistoric rock-art sites. Notes: The walkover survey recorded a number of new archaeological sites and enhanced the detail relating to the sites already recorded in the area. The new sites included post-medieval shielings, stock enclosures, twinning pens and field dykes relating to the farmsteads at Braids, along with a stone-revetted feature and boulder dykes of possible prehistoric date | river bank had uncovered evidence of occupation ranging from the Neolithic to the Iron Age. Up to 0.5m of peaty topsoil overlay clay and fine sand, all of which were waterlogged at the time of the investigation, were recorded. The only features were of recent date or of natural origin.

The walkover survey, on 16 September 2009, began on the S bank of the Carradale Water, opposite the sub-station, and terminated on the S side of Beinn an Tuirc, a distance of some 5.5km. The remains of nine small, circular structures (probably shieling huts) were found along the bank of an unnamed stream, roughly 1km NE of the summit of Beinn an Tuirc. One line of seven structures, centred on NR 75835 36885, was sandwiched between the burn and a forestry plantation; the second group of two was a short distance away at NR 75839 36803. ## Appendix 2: Gazetteer of Heritage Assets and Events information has been received by WOSAS.

Results: See notes below taken from site 3436.

Notes: A geophysical survey by HBM shows that areas of possible archaeological interest may yet lie beneath the remainder of the field and it is hoped these will be investigated by excavation in due course.

G Siggins 1990.

Four small areas were excavated to investigate features revealed by river erosion over a number of years. A radiocarbon date of 2370 +/- 100 bp has been obtained from a previously recorded pit fill. Groups of plough truncated post holes and shallow pits were located but very few finds were recovered. A substantial though poorly preserved prehistoric site is indicated. Further charcoal samples have been submitted for dating.

| Description             | Context: A pre-construction survey was required to identify and survey the extent of two archaeological sites. Results: Additional survey work wascarried out at two locations previously identified during the initial field survey. The additional work identified further shieling huts at site 4 and noted that there are no visible traces of site 31 within the access corridor. Notes: A group of shieling huts was partially identified during the initial field survey; the site was covered in dense bracken and high grass at the time of the survey. The potential for other elements of Site 4 to survive could not be ruled prior to a pre-construction survey. Field survey | was to take place when vegetation cover has died back.

Two shieling huts (Site 31) are recorded where the proposed access track enters the windfarm. As these shieling huts could not be located at the time of the ES survey due to the presence of forestry, pre-construction survey was required to identify these after felling.

Additional survey work was carried out at two locations previously identified during the initial field survey. The additional work identified further shieling huts at site 4 and noted that there are no visible traces of site 31 within the access corridor.

| Description             | The monument is a complex of 12 hut circles and 9 associated field systems and areas of field clearance, all dating to the Bronze Age. The complex of small farms on Torr Righ Mor is one of the best surviving of this period on Arran. These hut circles, clearance heaps and field banks lie on a heathery moorland, large parts of which are covered in peat. In a number of cases clearly defined field banks disappear under peat. The visible features are those prominent enough to show through the peat cover. The recent excavations to the N of the area proposed for scheduling showed that extensive remains of structures and field systems lie protected by the peat. That is, the landscape of the Bronze Age lies virtually untouched across the moor. The excavations on the N part of the Torr have also shown the very considerable amounts of structural and economic information which can be found in sites of this kind. The settlement complex remaining in the S part of the Torr is an archaeological resource of very high value. Because of the certain survival of features which are not now visible on the surface of the moor a broad area encompassing the visible remains is proposed for scheduling. It measures a maximum of 1690m (N-S) by a maximum of 980m (E-W), resting on the boundary fences of the moor at N, E and S. An area of forestry measuring 60m (E-W) x 670m (N-S) is specifically excluded. Statement of National Importance The complex of monuments is of national importance firstly because of the excellent preservation of the remains. Excavation nearby has shown that the visible and buried archaeology is of the highest quality and has suffered little damage over the centuries. It is of national importance also because of its extent. The area contains what can clearly be interpreted as a number of small farms. An opportunity will be preserved to examine in detail not only the working of individual farms but also the relationship between different farming units. They are also of national importance because of the longevity of the use of the structures demonstrated in the recent excavations to the N. Occupation was proved for a great part of the Bronze Age. The complex of monuments is of national importance to the themes of prehistoric settlement, agriculture, development and organisation of the landscape and the development of fortified sites. |

| Description             | The monument comprises an area of Machrie Moor in which a rich archaeological landscape of prehistoric ritual and domestic structures and deposits is known to survive, both above and below the ground, including stone circles, chambered cairns, hut-circles and field systems. The best known part of the monument is a group of six stone circles (in the care of Secretary of State) in the NE part of the complex. Excavations in 1985-6 demonstrated that elaborate timber circles (erected about 2300 BC) preceded two of the stone circles, which were constructed about 550 years later. Accompanied cremations were later placed in the centre of the circles. Nineteenth-century excavations at the two tallest stone circles recorded central burials in stone cists accompanied by food vessels. Different combinations of sandstone slabs and granite were carefully arranged to create the circles. Excavation has demonstrated that early neolithic activity (about 3500 BC) took place in this area, and extensive neolithic ritual and domestic features are likely to survive, sealed by the peat, in addition to the two chambered cairns. Hut circles and field system remains, probably of Bronze Age date, are found throughout the area to the scheduled. The area to be scheduled is irregular on plan and measures up to 1150m from SSW to NNE by 1060m transversely, to include all the upstanding features and an area around in which associated remains are likely to survive, as marked in red in the attached map extract. The above-ground portion of the modern memorial stone is excluded. Statement of National Importance The monument is of national importance because it is a particularly well-preserved landscape of Neolithic and Bronze age ritual and domestic monuments. The grouping of stone circles is rare and suggests that this was a ceremonial centre serving the inhabitants of the fertile Machrie basin, if not Arran as a whole. Excavation suggests that extensive multi-period remains are likely to survive beneath the peat. This area therefore has the potential to provide information about the development of early prehistoric society, its use of ceremony, burial rites, domestic architecture, agricultural practice and social organisation over several thousand years. The stone circles have special importance because of their place in the national consciousness. |

| Description             | The monument is a hillfort of the Iron Age, occupying a commanding position on a headland known as Drumadoon Point. The impressive cliffs on the seaward (W) side give sufficient protection, but on the landward side a single wall originally about 3m thick encloses the entire summit, about 414m in greatest length (NNE-SSW) and about 170m in greatest width. The wall is greatly denuded but the entrance is recognisable on the E side. There are the remains of slight scoops at the foot of the rocky slope on the E. A standing stone of the late Neolithic/early Bronze Age, measuring 1.8m broad x 0.3m thick x 1.5m high lies within the enclosed area. An area measuring 450m (NNE-SSW) x 220m transversely is proposed for scheduling. Single walled forts of this size occur only sporadically in the coastlands of W Scotland. This monument represents a great part of the fortified Iron Age remains on Arran. Statement of National Importance The monument is of national importance because it is a relatively well preserved example of a rare type. It is of national importance to Iron Age studies on the W coast and to the themes of Iron Age settlement, economy and the development of defensive sites in the first millennium BC. The standing stone is of national importance because of its possible association with the Machrie Moor ceremonial complex. References Bibliography The monument is RCAHMS number NR 82 NE 1 and 11. |

| Description             | The monument comprises a large kerbed cairn (sometimes also described as a stone circle) which is situated on the S side of the farm track to Moss Farm. |

The robbed cairn measures 23m in diameter and stands up to 0.8m high; surrounding it is a kerb of seven upright stones varying in height from 0.8m to 1.3m and an additional five stones, now on their sides. In an act of vandalism, a large chip has recently been removed from the northwesternmost stone. A farm track which formerly ran through the N arc of the cairn has been relocated to the N.

The area to be scheduled measures 60m in diameter, to include the cairn and an area around in which associated remains may survive, as marked in red on the attached map extract.

Statement of National Importance

The monument is of national importance because it has well defined field characteristics and is an unusual form of monument which has the potential to provide information about Bronze Age ritual and funerary practice. It is also situated on the immediate edge of a renowned, dense concentration of related Neolithic and Bronze monuments at Machrie Moor (both domestic and 'ritual') which have great potential to enhance our understanding of one particular landscape and its inhabitants in particular, and prehistoric society in general.

| Description             | The monument comprises a pair of hut circles of the Bronze Age, with associated cultivation remains, and a cairn, which is apparently chambered. There are about 6 stone clearance mounds 0.6m high and up to 4m in diameter, spread within 50m of the hut circles. The cairn lies c. 150m to the SSE of the hut circles, on the edge of a steep drop to the Machrie water. The cairn survives as a turf-covered stony mound. The arrangement of upright slabs in this area and the length and size of the forecourt make it certain that this is a Clyde type chambered tomb. An area measuring a maximum of 210m (NW-SE) and a maximum of 125m transversely is proposed for scheduling, to include all of these features and the likely further remains of associated activity which will survive beneath the topsoil in the area. |

The hut circles and field clearance cairns, while not being as well preserved as some others in the area, are, when considered with the adjacent groups (also proposed for scheduling) of national importance to our understanding of the organisation of the agricultural landscape in the Bronze Age. The study of these hut circles and their associated cultivation remains together with the adjacent sites would provide important information. The chambered cairn is of national importance because of its proximity to the Machrie Moor ceremonial complex; while not being as well preserved as some Clyde cairns on Arran, the relationship of this monument to the complex is of national importance to our understanding of prehistoric ceremonial activity.

| Description                      | The monument comprises the remains of Skipness Castle and Kilbrannan Chapel, both of medieval date and surviving to wall-head height. The castle is situated on gently sloping ground around 10m above sea level, overlooking the Sound of Kilbrannan, the entrance to Loch Fyne, and the Isle of Arran. Kilbrannan Chapel lies 330m SE of the castle, close to the shore. The monument was originally scheduled in 1962, but an inadequate area was included to protect the remains and the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present scheduling rectifies this. The medieval castle consists of a rectangular castle of enceinte (enclosure) with massive rubble walls that survive almost to their original height. The walls rise from a plinth and there are projecting towers in the SE corner and in the W wall (the latrine tower). Entrances leading into the courtyard are located in the N and S walls; that on the S is a complex gatehouse with a portcullis chamber above it. The curtain walls, built in the late 13th or early 14th century, incorporated two earlier buildings: a hall-house on the N side of the enclosure, and a chapel on the S side, both dating from the first half of the 13th century. Kilbrannan Chapel was built around the same time as the castle was reconstructed, in the late 13th or early 14th century. It consists of a single rectangular chamber, measuring 25m x 8m, of coursed rubble masonry with red Arran sandstone dressings at the doors, windows, quoins and skews. It is lit by narrow splayed lancet windows in the nave and chancel and a larger, Y-traceried window at the E end. It was entered through two doors in the S wall (one now blocked) and one in the N wall. Within the chapel and surrounding graveyard is a significant group of five, late medieval, recumbent tombstones. The area to be scheduled is in two parts, both irregular on plan, to include the remains of the castle and chapel and an area around each of them in which evidence for their construction and use may survive, as shown in red on the accompanying map. The scheduling specifically excludes all active burial lairs and the above-ground elements of all burial monuments of 19th-century or later date. It also excludes the above-ground elements of all modern walls, fences and signage. |
| Statement of National Importance | The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows:                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

Intrinsic characteristics

The monument is a fine example of a medieval castle and associated chapel, with upstanding remains dating from the 13th to the 16th centuries, and alterations and reconstruction dating to the 18th and 19th centuries. The castle survives in excellent condition and has high potential for the study of its architectural form and development sequence. Limited excavations and geophysical survey in and around the castle have uncovered pockets of medieval occupation deposits, Christian burials and evidence of foundations and earthworks relating to the construction and development of the castle. Despite landscaping and clearance during the 18th and 19th centuries, it is highly likely that archaeological deposits associated with the monument's earlier phases, construction, use and abandonment survive within and around the upstanding remains.

Skipness Castle is the product of a long and complex development sequence and it has excellent potential to add to our understanding of major changes in architectural form in Scottish castles between the 13th and 16th centuries. The architectural evidence indicates that the first buildings on the site were a hall-house and chapel, built in the first half of the 13th century, and enclosed at that time by an earth and timber rampart. At around the turn of the 13th and 14th centuries, the hall-house and chapel were incorporated into an enlarged and strengthened castle, enclosed by a high curtain wall, with gatehouse, portcullis and defensive features, including crosslet arrow slits, projecting towers and crenellated wall-head. The original chapel was secularised and it was replaced by Kilbrannan Chapel, built some 400m to the SE. The massive curtain wall enclosed an oblong courtyard with ranges of buildings against the S, N and E walls, while the W wall was lined with a timber gallery. The northernmost part of the E range of courtyard buildings was altered in two phases to form a tower-house. It was first heightened by three upper storeys, and the upper portion of the adjacent section of the E curtain wall was rebuilt and provided with a battlemented parapet walk. The transformation to a tower-house was completed later in the 16th century by the reconstruction of the upper portion of the tower, and the removal of the remainder of the E courtyard range, to leave the tower freestanding on its S side. The castle was abandoned by the end of the 17th century and, despite later farm use and the impact of repairs in the 19th and 20th centuries, there is a remarkable level of survival of medieval masonry.

The chapel is particularly well preserved. It survives to wall-head height throughout and much of the architectural dressed stonework of the doors and windows is still in place. It has seen little change or disturbance and retains much of its original form. The surrounding graveyard has excellent potential for the survival of important archaeological remains of medieval and post-Reformation date. Excavation and geophysical survey around the chapel suggest there is high potential for the survival of Christian burials over a long period of time and, possibly, the remains of an earlier church. The five West Highland graveslabs within the chapel and surrounding graveyard survive in good condition and can inform us about medieval iconography and artistic form, secular patronage, and the ways that people expressed their religious faith and devotion. There is excellent potential for the survival of burials, both within the castle around the site of the earlier chapel, and surrounding the later Kilbrannan Chapel. Such evidence has the potential to enhance understanding of burial practices over a long period and scientific analysis of the skeletal remains could reveal evidence for health, diet, illness, cause of death and, possibly, the occupational activities of people directly associated with the castle.

Contextual characteristics

The castle occupies a commanding position. Situated on open ground, it takes advantage of a natural gravel terrace, which was artificially enhanced and extended. There are wide views to the S, SW and E out to sea, a reminder of the castle's strategic location and the importance of the sea during the medieval period. It is one of many medieval castles in Argyll and is comparable with broadly contemporary sites such as Castle Sween, Dunstaffnage Castle and Rothesay Castle.

Kilbrannan chapel is considerably larger than other examples of medieval chapels in Kintyre and its position, separate but clearly associated with the castle, adds to its interest and significance.

Associative characteristics

Skipness Castle was the administrative centre of a considerable barony, one of the great medieval lordships of Kintyre. The site has considerable potential, therefore, to inform our understanding of the nature of lordship and wider medieval society. The site also has considerable potential to enhance our understanding of medieval castles and the daily lives of the people who occupied them, as well as medieval warfare and specific historical events. The site has a long and complex history, as demonstrated in the upstanding and subsurface archaeology, as well as by the documentary evidence. As such the site has the potential to provide information about changes in society over a period of several hundred years. The castle is first recorded in 1261 when it was part of the lordship of Knapdale and in the possession of the Dugald MacSween, by which time he had probably built the hall-house and chapel and enclosed the site. Walter Stewart, Earl of Mentieth, acquired it in 1262. The castle changed hands during the Wars of Independence and it is unclear whether the enclosure walls were rebuilt and enlarged to the present layout by Sir John Stewart of Mentieth, possibly funded by King Edward I of England, or by the MacDonalds. The castle and lordship passed to the MacDonald Lords of the Isles in 1325 and remained in their ownership until their forfeiture in 1493, when the castle and barony reverted to the Crown. The castle and its history contribute towards our understanding of English political and architectural influence in Scotland during the 13th and 14th centuries.

Archibald Campbell, second Earl of Argyll, was granted the estate in 1502 and it remained in the Campbell family until the mid 19th century. There were repairs in the mid 17th century, soon after it withstood a siege by the MacDonalds during raids in Kintyre. A warrant was issued for 'razing down the castle' soon after Argyll's Rebellion in 1685. The laird successfully petitioned against carrying this out, although the castle was abandoned soon after. It was then converted into a farmstead, which meant the removal of the early courtyard buildings except the tower-house, and the erection of lean-to sheds and offices against both sides of the curtain wall. These farm buildings were removed in 1898 and steps taken to preserve all that remained of the castle. Much of the form of the present castle mound is a result of 19th-century landscaping associated with Skipness House and its policies. Concern about the stability of the castle in the 1950s and 60s led to it being taken into care in 1973, after which a major campaign of repair and consolidation continued until 1995.

Kilbrannan Chapel, dedicated to St Brendan, is clearly of medieval date, but the name 'Kilbrannan' and the presence of early burials suggest there is a longer tradition of worship and burial at this site; there may have been an earlier chapel here. The chapel continued in use as the local church after the castle was abandoned. The use of the graveyard for burials has given it strong associations with the local community; indeed, it is still in use as a burial ground today.

National Importance

The monument is of national importance as one of the major medieval fortresses on the western seaboard of Scotland, together with its associated chapel. The monument has a long and complex history and has an inherent potential to contribute to our understanding of the past, in particular, the construction techniques, defences and domestic life of a medieval castle. Kilbrannan Chapel is a fine example of a medieval chapel. Its importance is enhanced by its direct association with Skipness Castle and the presence of a significant collection of late medieval carved tombstones within the surrounding graveyard. In addition to the impressive upstanding remains, there is high potential for the survival of important archaeological remains relating to the use and development of both the castle and the chapel. The good state of preservation of both of these buildings, and the survival of historical records relating to occupation of the castle, enhance this potential. The loss of the monument would seriously impede our ability to understand the medieval architecture of Argyll and Bute, the history of the Lords of the Isles, and the nature of medieval warfare and religion.

Scenic

Level of interest

Some

The site contributes some Scenic value to the landscape, seen mainly from the sea to the east where the overall landscape is dominated by the Paps of Jura beyond the Island of Gigha.

Nature Conservation

Level of interest

Some

The establishment of woodlands on the island has increased the variety of habitats and gives the site some value for Nature Conservation.

Location and Setting

Achamore House lies on the eastern side of the Island of Gigha, some 4 miles (6.5km) off the west coast of the Mull of Kintyre. Gigha itself is 6 miles (9.5km) long and, at its widest point, some 1.5 miles (2.5km) in breadth. A central core of hills runs down the island, its highest point rising to some 328' (100m) at Creag Bhan.

On approaching the island by sea from the east, the Paps of Jura form a dominating backdrop to the view of the island. The trees of Achamore House are significant from the sea crossing as they form virtually the only woodland area on the island. The setting of the site is very important, more for climatic rather than scenic reasons, and the impact of both has been tempered by the planting of trees for shelter. From within the garden, views can be gained only from the highest point of the site out to the surrounding islands and sounds of Gigha and Jura and to the Atlantic Ocean. The island has an average rainfall of c.45" per annum and the North Atlantic Drift moderates the temperature to provide a mean summer temperature of 56 (o) F with a minimum temperature of 10 (o) F frost in winter. Ph levels are low, at below 4.5 on average.

Achamore House lies on the south-east side of the island in the lee of Gigha's central hill-range. The designed landscape extends west of the island's road to the lower slopes of these hills. The northern boundary is marked by the woodland which extends east to the roadside. The southern boundary is also woodland, on either side of the south drive now only open between the South Lodge and the junction with the farm access road. The south drive was formerly the main access to the house from the south pier before the new east jetty was constructed.

Within the garden, the south drive is now grass and access to the house is by the north drive, both laid out originally at the end of the 19th century. Reference to the 1st edition OS map of c.1860 shows only two drives from the east from the island's only access road. The approximate lines of these drives, now grass, remain within the garden as Green Drive and Green Walk. The designed landscape extends over some 65 acres (26.3ha) today.

Site History

The woodland structure of the designed landscape dates from the late 19th century, although the gardens themselves were developed by Sir James Horlick from 1944.

Historically, Gigha and its neighbouring island, Cara, belonged to the Clan Macdonald, even before David II formally granted the lands to them in 1344. For many centuries, a power struggle raged between them and the MacNeill Clan who finally became the undisputed lairds in 1590 but sold the lands at the end of the 18th century. William Scarlett, 3rd Lord Abinger, purchased the estate at the end of the 19th century and built the present house. He sold it to Lt Colonel Sir James Horlick, OBE MC VMH, in 1944. Sir James had developed skills as a plantsman at his previous home at Titness Park, Berkshire, and bought Gigha in order to extend the plant collection which he had begun to amass there. Not only did he develop the garden, but as laird of the island he introduced a series of improvements which earned him the respect and affection of the island's population. On his death, in the 1970s, the estate was sold to Mr D.W.N. Landale with the exception of the plant collection which was gifted to the National Trust for Scotland to be propagated for the future.

Architectural Features

Achamore House, listed B, was built in the early 1880s to the designs of John Honeyman. It is a two-storey building which was remodelled in 1900 following a fire, and since 1944 has been subdivided into flats. The Gate Lodge, listed B, stands at the south entrance and is dated 1895. The architect again is thought to be Honeyman. The gateway on the East Drive, listed B, has four square ashlar gatepiers with moulded caps and bosses connected by curved walls and two other piers of the same form. The gates and railings are cast iron with arrow-heads. The farmhouse and steading, listed B, lie to the south-west of the garden.

Woodland

The main woodland areas lie to the north and south of the house and were largely planted by Captain William Scarlett following the completion of the house, to provide shelter and cover for game. Species include a core of sycamore, beech, ash, horse chestnut, elm, alder and some ornamental conifers which have grown despite adverse weather conditions, in particular, south- westerly gales and salt spray. Some older trees remain in the area between the Green Walk and the North Drive. Reference to the 1st edition OS map confirms that this area was a woodland before 1860, as was the now coniferous strip on the roadside edge to the north of the site. Sir James extended the woodland largely with Sitka spruce and Pinus radiata to the west of the house up and over the brow of the hill. The woodlands were used by Sir James Horlick to shelter the collection and thinning was, and still is, a practice used to allow more light into the plant collection.

New woodland shelterbelts are being established on the site, comprising mainly mixed deciduous trees with some Sitka spruce. A coniferous shelterbelt to the north of the nursery garden is now mature.

Woodland Garden

The garden lies mainly to the east and south of the house and was established by Sir James Horlick. Sir James developed the garden incrementally, adding at least one new compartment every year. Each compartment has been named, eg the Pond Garden, the Theatre, the Hospital Garden, the George Taylor Garden and the Malcolm Allen Garden (named after the Head Gardener for 52 years until 1970.) Mid-May is regarded as the best time to see the garden when the beauty of Sir James' planting for colour and texture can most be appreciated. The plant material thus dates mainly from 1944 with the exception of a few older specimens of plants such as the Cordylines and the Desfontainea behind the house. Rhododendron ponticum was cleared from the north drive and clearings were made in the woodland by removal of dead wood, to form over 50 separate named compartments. Shelter to individual compartments is provided largely by Griselinia littoralis spp. and, amongst others, Rhododendron ponticum, Olearia, Senecio, Eleagnus and bamboos. Achamore is renowned for its collection of plants, far too numerous to be detailed in this report; however, they have been catalogued and are well documented. The plant collection includes an excellent range of the Maddenii, Lacteam, Triflorum, Irroratum series, as well as both the larger leaf and dwarf Rhododendrons. The Horlick Hybrids are those bred by Sir James both at Titness Park and at Achamore, the former name featuring often in the resulting hybrids. R. 'Titness Park', a cross between R. 'Shilsonii' and R. edlophytum, received an RHS Award in 1954, as have many others over the years. Azaleas are planted through the Rhododendron collection and particularly on the drive and provide a brilliant display of colour in May and June. Many other plants, in particular Pieris and Enkianthus, thrive here, as do Drimys, Magnolia and Hydrangea, alongside many Chilean and Australasian plants. A collection of Sorbus spp. was also established, among them S. megalocarpa. Since being gifted to the National Trust for Scotland in 1962, the collection has been widely propagated.

Walled Gardens

The garden was built by the Scarlett family in a clearing in the woodland to the north- west of the house. The walled garden is divided into two areas. In the north walled garden, a collection of specimen conifers is grown in grass including Abies kakawamii and A. nordmanniana. The greenhouses stand in this area and house tender plants and fruit. The south walled garden is totally cultivated with vegetables and cut flowers. An excellent view of the garden is gained from above on the Spring Bank. Climbers were established on the third of a mile of plantable interior wall surface of the garden, among them jasmines, honeysuckles and climbing roses; the effect is stunning.

(NR 6681 5382) Cairn (NR)
(Carn Ban) (NAT)
OS 6" map, (1924)

This cairn lies near the E end of a low promontory (10m OD) within 90m of the shore and, like the surrounding area, is heavily overgrown with heather, bracken and scrub. The cairn was reduced to its present denuded condition at the end of the 18 century, when a large quantity of stones were removed for building purposes (The Statistical Account [OSA] 1793).

At this time four short cists and several other smaller ones were uncovered, and the cairn itself was found to be about 15.2m in diameter. At the present time the remains consist of a spread of stones covering a roughly circular area between 17m and 18m in diameter, and standing to a maximum height of one metre. Situated close together near the centre there is a group of four cists (1-4 on RCAHMS plan), while a fifth (5) lies near the edge of the cairn to the S. Built on ground level and largely supported by the surrounding cairn-material, the cists forming the central group are all aligned roughly NNW and SSE. They are composed of slabs measuring between 0.08m and 0.20m in thickness, and a considerable quantity of quartz pebbles can still be seen in the packing in their immediate vicinity.

It is recorded (OSA 1793) that when the cists were first discovered an unspecified number of 'urns' were found in cists 3 and 4; none of these now survives, but at least one of them was probably a Food Vessel.

Some 1.2m W of this central group of cists there is a large slab (C) lying almost flat, but not apparently forming part of a cist. Near the perimeter of the cairn on the S there is an irregularly-shaped depression (5), lined with boulders and measuring about 1.2m by 1.0m and 0.3m in depth. This is the only example that still remains visible of the three small cists indicated on the plan in the OSA. Their position suggests that they all contained secondary burials.

Appendix 2: Gazetteer of Heritage Assets and Events

RCAHMS 1971, visited 1963.

No change to RCAHMS report.

Surveyed at 1/10,000.

Visited by OS (J M) 18 January 1978

Cist 1. 3 pieces of long bone visible inside - said to have been returned recently after examination. (Information from Betty MacNeill.)

Cist 2. Only 1 piece of capstone now visible.

Slab C. Not visible.

Next to 5 (c. 1m E) is what may be a second secondary burial.)

Description From Canmore ID: 38598

An old burying-place where there is a cross, with one of the arms and part of the top broken. The place is called 'Rìgh Chaibeal', ie the King's Chapel or Tomb. Statistical Account (OSA) 1793.

'A well-known burying-ground, but not used for a considerable time; while the former tenant of Tarbert was ploughing about the edge of the above ground the plough turned open a small wooden coffin. No trace of any gravestone can be seen as the place is filled up with stones and rubbish. Near the centre of the burying ground stands an old stone cross, the arms destroyed a few years back by battle who knocked it down several times, but erected again by the inhabitants in the most suitable place'.

The name 'Rìgh Chaibeal' could not be confirmed, all the local authorities being of the opinion that 'Field of the Burying Ground' - Rìdh' a' Chaibeil - should be adopted. Name Book 1869.

A Neolithic or Bronze Age cairn (information from notes and illu. by R E MacCallum to OS, 1962) A small excavation at the SW edge in April 1961 showed the cairn material to be at least 3ft thick, all but 6ins being below ground. The cross, Keills-type and possible 10th century is inserted to a depth of 18ins. D M Wilson and D G Hurst 1964.

This burial-ground is said to have been used until a fairly recent period (Anderson 1939). At the present time, however, the graveyard is marked simply by an uncultivated patch of ground, measuring about 25m by 20m, which has been artificially raised by stones dumped from the surrounding arable field; its original shape is uncertain, and although it is possible that a chapel formerly existed here, no trace of any building is now visible (cf also NR65SE 12).

Within the burial-ground there stands a mutilated and weathered cross, made of local micaceous schist. The cross is probably not precisely in its original position since it faces NE and SW and is only loosely supported at the base by boulders. Both the arms had been broken off before 1875, when White (1875) published a sketch of the monument, but one of the arms was discovered shortly before the Commission's visit so that the outline of the cross can now be reconstructed. A monolith, it originally stood only a few centimetres higher than its present height of 1.83m and measured 0.66m across the arms.

T P White 1875; R S G Anderson 1939; RCAHMS 1971, visited 1966.

| Description | From Canmore ID: 38597 (NR 6541 5151) (information from R E MacCallum to OS) About 14m S of the S corner of the field there is a large flat-topped slab of schist, locally known as the 'Holy Stone', on which is incised a group of Early Christian symbols. The stone is wedge-shaped and measures about 2.4m long at the base by 0.6m in maximum height. The symbols have been pecked on the upper surface of the stone, the one on the left of the drawing being a Latin cross with a ring over the head, a semi-circle (?Calvary mount) at the foot, and dots in the interspaces of the cross. To the right of this is a symbol measuring about 0.9m in length and consisting of a cross with bifid terminals and a curved bar over the head. The lower end of the shaft is prolonged to bisect a rectangular figure with two right-angled and two curved corners - perhaps a representation of an altar or a socket-stone. Slightly below and to the right of the last there is a third symbol consisting of a small Latin cross with a cup-shaped hollow on either side of the base of the shaft. The presence of these symbols and the existence of the neighbouring cross (NR65SE 13) suggest that this was a place of some ecclesiastical significance in Early Christian times. RCAHMS 1971, visited 1966. |

| Description             | The monument comprises a prehistoric dun, likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500). The dun is located on the summit of a steep-sided rocky knoll, at 15m above sea level, overlooking Garbh Phort on the west coast of Gigha. It is visible as the remains of a sub-oval wall drawn around the margin of the knoll to enclose an area of approximately 13.5m by 12m. The monument was first scheduled in 1972, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The area to be scheduled is an irregular polygon on plan, to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, and adjoining land essential for the monument's support and preservation, as shown in red on the accompanying map. The scheduling specifically excludes the above-ground remains of all fences to allow for their maintenance. Statement of National Importance Cultural Significance The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows: Intrinsic characteristics |

The dun occupies the northern part of a small coastal promontory, with two sheltered sea inlets to the N and S and a neck of adjoining land to the E. The dun sits on the summit of a steep-sided rocky knoll, which affords it strong natural protection. Access to the dun is easiest from the S and W, over less steep ground. The entrance was positioned in the W, where there is a break in the low, turf-covered walling around the edge of the knoll. A number of outer facing-stones can be seen intermittently around the flanks of the knoll below the summit. Interestingly, the lowest course of the outer facing-stones continues across the entrance, thereby providing a step or threshold at the outer end of the passage; a similar feature was observed at the broadly contemporary fort, Dun Chibhich, 950m to the SSE. The interior is slightly sunken and lies more than 1m below the top of the surviving internal wall, which may reflect the exposed nature of this location. There are no visible features in the interior, apart from the ruin of a secondary rectangular building, which partly overlies the dun wall.

Overall, the footprint of the monument is intact and it survives in good condition, despite its exposed coastal location. There is high potential for the survival of buried deposits and features beneath and beyond the wall and within the dun interior. Future examination of the dun could provide information about its date, form and construction, and investigation of the interior could contribute to our understanding of how it was used and how this may have changed over time. Buried artefacts and palaeoenvironmental evidence can contribute to our understanding of how people lived and worked, the extent and nature of trade and exchange, and the nature of the agricultural economy in this vicinity. The monument has the potential to contribute to our understanding of the nature of Iron Age settlement and the design and development of these small defended settlements.

Contextual characteristics

This type of defended settlement characterises much of the coastal occupation of Argyll and Atlantic Scotland in later prehistory. Duns belong to a much broader category of later prehistoric defended settlement, which includes brochs, forts, crannogs, duns and hut circles. Altogether, over 500 later prehistoric settlements are known in Argyll. It is believed that duns represent the remains of the living spaces of small groups or single families. They are largely a coastal phenomenon and they tend to be located on locally high ground, along prominent coastal routes or within easy reach of the coast, as in this case.

Dun an Trinnse is one of a cluster of five similar duns on Gigha, which together offer high potential to investigate the relationships between a group of broadly contemporary strongholds in an island setting. Researchers have suggested that duns are often positioned for their seaward views, their visibility to seafarers, and sometimes their inter-visibility. Dun an Trinnse occupies a sentinel position with extensive views westwards over the sea channel and a line of sight to Islay and Jura; it would also have been clearly visible from the sea. This monument has high potential to contribute to our understanding of the Iron Age occupation of Gigha, Kintyre and further afield.

Associative characteristics

The dun is depicted on the 1st edition Ordnance Survey map where it is labelled 'Fort'.

National Importance

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, the design and construction of later prehistoric defended settlements and their place in the wider economy, society and landscape. There is good potential for well-preserved archaeological remains to survive on the site. These buried remains can tell us much about the people who built and lived in the dun, and the connections they had with other groups. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the occupation of Argyll in the later prehistoric and historic periods.

| Description             | The monument comprises a prehistoric dun likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500). The dun is visible as a sub-oval enclosure sited on the summit of an isolated rocky knoll in the island of Gigha, at a height of 45m above sea level. Overall the dun measures approximately 35m by 24m. The dun is located inland, towards the centre of the island, but has extensive views over the sea channel E of Gigha and beyond, to the Kintyre peninsula. The monument was first scheduled in 1972, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this. The area to be scheduled is an irregular polygon on plan, to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, and adjoining land essential for the monument's support and preservation, as shown in red on the accompanying map. The scheduling extends up to but does not include the post-and-wire fence to the N of the knoll. Statement of National Importance Cultural Significance The monument's cultural significance can be expressed as follows: Intrinsic characteristics The dun enclosure occupies the summit of a locally distinctive knoll and takes advantage of the natural defence afforded by steep rocky slopes to the N, W and E. Access is relatively easy up a gentler slope from the SW, where the 0.9m wide entrance is situated. The low turf-covered enclosure wall encloses a space approximately 29m N-S by 18m transversely. The wall-line is intact, though reduced to a band of stony debris up to 2.7m wide around much of the circuit, with inner and outer facing stones visible intermittently. In the SW quadrant, however, an impressive 4m length of the outer wall's lower courses is exposed immediately E of the entrance, standing over 1m high; one particularly massive block measures 1.9m in length. The interior is roughly level and largely featureless, except in the NW where the remains of an oval or sub-oval building appear to abut the enclosure wall. In the SE, stones protruding from the inner face may represent the remains of another structure. Overall, the footprint of the monument is intact and it survives in good condition. There is high potential for the survival of buried deposits and features beneath and beyond the dun wall and within the interior. Future examination of the site could provide information about its date, form and construction, and investigation of the interior could contribute to our understanding of how it was used and how this may have changed over time. Buried artefacts and palaeoenvironmental evidence can contribute to our understanding of how people lived and worked, the extent and nature of trade and exchange, and the nature of the agricultural economy in this vicinity. The monument has the potential to contribute to our understanding of the nature of Iron Age settlement and the design, development and use of these small defended settlements. |

The dun here is a type of defended settlement which characterises much of the coastal occupation of Argyll and Atlantic Scotland in later prehistory. These duns belong to a much broader category of later prehistoric settlement, which includes brochs, forts, crannogs, duns and hut circles. Altogether, over 500 later prehistoric settlements are known in Argyll. It is believed that duns represent the remains of living spaces of small groups or single families. This is a particularly interesting example because of its position among a small cluster of five similar duns on Gigha.

Researchers have suggested that the position of duns is significant for their seaward outlook, their likely intervisibility and their visibility to seafarers. Dunan an t Seasgrain is unusual in being located inland, but it has good seaward views to the E and its position near the centre of the island may indicate that it served more than one family or group. Further study here could investigate the inter-relationships with the other, broadly contemporary strongholds in Gigha and with comparable sites in Islay and Jura and on the Argyll mainland.

This monument is of national importance because it has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular, the design and construction of later prehistoric defended settlements and their place in the wider economy and society. There is high potential for well-preserved archaeological remains to survive on the site and along the SW access route. These buried remains can tell us much about the people who built and lived here and the connections they had with other groups. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our future ability to appreciate and understand the occupation of Argyll in the later prehistoric and historic periods.

and very steep drops to the W and E. The only easy approach is from the SW. This natural defence is enhanced by a sub-oval, outer wall around the fort's southern circuit. The enclosure wall remains an impressive and substantial feature. It stands more than 1m in height and is over 3m wide in places. There is a well-defined entrance, 1.5m wide, in the SE part of the wall circuit, with a step or threshold at the mouth of the entrance passage. Most of the walling is obscured by vegetation, but in places the lower courses are visible. Vegetation also obscures the remains of any buildings and structures surviving in the interior, although a sunken court measuring 13.5m by 7.5m has been recorded previously, immediately inside the entrance.

This fort is of particular interest because of its larger than usual size and, consequently, the possible variety of functions it performed for its prehistoric builders and occupants. Elsewhere, similar forts have been shown to have a greater time-depth than is obvious from the above-ground remains, sometimes with the discovery of Bronze Age (earlier) and medieval (later) artefacts and structures, as well as different phases of Iron Age use. Dun Chibhich may also have been in use over an extended period. Given the good state of preservation of the enclosing wall and the relative remoteness of the location, it is likely that substantial buried remains may survive here, including buildings and occupation debris. The site has high potential to enhance our understanding of the origins, date, nature and development sequence of large defensive sites in western Scotland. Buried deposits, features and structures can elucidate the economic and agricultural basis of the settlement, provide insights into the contacts and social status of the people who built and occupied the site, and allow us to determine the duration of occupation of the fort.

Contextual characteristics

The word 'dun' is commonly applied to smaller defensive structures than Dun Chibhich, typically those less than 20m in diameter, which are likely to have been the homesteads of single families. The classification of Iron Age strongholds in Scotland is an ongoing topic of debate among researchers, but Dun Chibhich is considered to be a fort because of its size. Forts are much less common than duns in western Scotland, representing around 10% of the total number of defensive enclosures. This fort is one of a cluster of five broadly contemporary, but smaller defensive sites in Gigha, all of which are named as duns, including the coastal dun at Dun an Trinnse 930m to the NNW and another dun in the interior of the island, Dunan an t Seasgain, 745m to the NE. Researchers have suggested that the location of forts and duns is significant and that they were deliberately positioned to be intervisible, and were also intended both to be visible from the sea and to command good views out to sea. Dun Chibhich has a prominent position on the island atop one of the highest knolls, from where there are commanding views not only to Islay, Jura and Kintyre to the E, but also across the western and eastern sea channels which flank Gigha. Further study of Dun Chibhich and its function alongside the cluster of smaller duns in Gigha has high potential to enhance our understanding of the date, settlement pattern and use of defensive sites in the later prehistoric period.

Associative characteristics

Dun Chibhich is traditionally said to be the approximate location of a 'giant's grave', that of a local chieftain Kifi who, according to folklore, is buried in a stone enclosure to the S of the fort. A substantial sub-rectangular structure is visible in aerial photographs to the S of the fort, but no recorded archaeological evidence is available for its date or function.

National Importance

The monument comprises a prehistoric fort, likely to date to the Iron Age (between 500 BC and AD 500). The fort survives as a substantial turf-covered wall enclosing an area of approximately 37m by 25m, with associated buried remains. The fort is located in the centre of the island of Gigha and occupies a rocky knoll crowning the NE end of a prominent ridge at 45m above sea level. It has extensive views in all directions. The monument was first scheduled in 1972, but the documentation does not meet modern standards: the present rescheduling rectifies this.

The area to be scheduled is circular on plan, measuring 70m in diameter, to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment may survive, and adjoining land essential for the monument's support and preservation, as shown in red on the accompanying map.

Statement of National Importance

The monument is of national importance as a good example of a later prehistoric fortification, with its natural defences enhanced by a substantial stone wall. It has an inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular of defensive sites in western Scotland and its islands and in the Irish Sea region. Dun Chibhich has particular importance as the largest defended site on Gigha among a group of broadly contemporary strongholds. There is high potential for well-preserved archaeological remains to survive within and immediately outside the fort. The loss of the monument would significantly diminish our ability to appreciate and understand early Scottish communal fortifications.

A four-sided granite pillar 1.7m high bearing an Ogam inscription on its NW edge; the sides of the pillar measure 0.25m to 0.31m at the base and 0.20m to 0.23m at the top. What appears to have been the same stone was described by Martin (1934) in the late 17th century as being about 3m high, and although his estimate is probably exaggerated it is known that a piece of the top was broken off when the stone was knocked down about 1845. Some twenty years later it fell again and on this occasion it was not re-erected precisely on the original site, but close to it (Rhys 1901).

The Ogam inscription is defaced by a series of holes on the base-line, but Professor K H Jackson suggests, very tentatively, that it may have read 'the son of Coiceile' and says it is probably not older than the 7th century.

These are the remains of the former parish-church of Gigha and Cara, which was dedicated to St Cathan and probably dates from the 13th century. The structure appears still to have been in use about the year 1695, but some time during the early 18th century it was replaced by another building standing upon a different site. (NR 648 487) The church stands within a burial-ground and although roofless, the structure is fairly well-preserved the N and E walls standing to their original heights, and the W and S walls to an average height of about 1.5m. Some of the masonry has been restored or consolidated at a comparatively recent period. The church, which is unicameral, is of simple rectangular plan and measures 11.6m from W to E by 6.1m transversely over walls some 0.8m in thickness. The masonry is of random rubble laid in lime mortar with window dressings of dark red and coarse-grained yellow sandstone. An opening towards the W end of the S wall marks the position of the original entrance-doorway, of which nothing now remains. The font, an irregularly octagonal basin of schist, has been set up at NR 647 489. A broken, Early Christian cross illustrated by White in 1875 and described by Muir in 1885 as being 1.5m long, has now disappeared from the burial-ground. The earliest tombstones remaining are 14th to 15th century. A spring situated on the east side of the roadway a few metres to the south of the burial-ground is said to have been known as St Cathan's Well (Anderson 1939).

T P White 1875; T S Muir 1885; R S G Anderson 1939; RCAHMS 1971, visited 1966.

St Cathan's Church is as described and illustrated by RCAHMS. The font, as described and illustrated by RCAHMS, now lies in the present church at NR 6472 4898.

No further information was found concerning the Early Christian cross. The location of St Cathan's Well cannot be given with certainty. From Anderson's description the spring shown on the OS 6" map, (1924) at NR 6435 4806 would seem the likely site, but this spring is in fact a slight issue of water into a ditch. The nearby well shown on OS 6" map (1924) at NR 6432 4807 is now completely covered over. It is reported (information from Betty McNeill, Keil Cottage, Gigha) to have been a well built structure with steps leading down into it, and was probably St Cathan's Well though that name is not known locally. Visited by OS (J B) 18 January 1978.

This cairn (Fig. 19) is situated at a height of some 10 m O.D. on a heather covered rock-ridge just under 800 m SW. of Ardlamey farmhouse. Approximately circular on plan, it has a mean diameter of 14 m and stands to a maximum height of 1.1 m. It has been severely robbed of its stone, presumably in order to build the nearby field-dyke, but four kerb-stones are still visible in situ. A side slab and an end slab of a central cist, aligned NNE. and SSW., are in their original positions and the second side-slab now leans slightly inwards. Before planning, this cist was excavated by one of the Commission's officers and the position from which the missing end-slab had been taken was found to be clearly visible (1). There was no trace of the stone or stones which had formed the cover of the cist.

The slabs which remain in situ on the N. and E. both measure 2.03 m in length, 0.18 m in thickness, and 1.04 m and 1.25 m in height respectively. The W. slab, which has tilted inwards, measures 1.75 m in length, 1.07 m in height and between 0.1 m and 0.15m in thickness. Excavation revealed the packing boulders that had been behind the S. slab and indicated that the cist had measured about 1.8 m by 1.2 m internally. The E. and W. stones were based on the natural rock, but the N. slab rested on a layer of sand and gravel about 0.3 m in thickness which filled the irregularities of the bed-rock floor. In this filing there were quantities of pebbles and flakes of white quartz, which would appear to have been deliberately introduced since a number of quartz chips were also found between the backing-stones of the missing slab. Four tiny fragments of cremated bone were discovered in the upper part of the filing, but there were no other finds of any kind. The cist is unusually large for a Bronze Age cist, but for a possible analogy see No. 84 [NR62NE 6].
